Nelson Maps Plan to Avoid Rationing Of Clothes

Increased Output, Conservation Held Key; Supply of Textiles Adequate

By Edwin D. Gritz
Post Staff Writer

A six-point production and conservation program designed to eliminate the necessity of clothes rationing for the duration of the war was made public yesterday by WPB Chairman Donald M. Nelson.

Announcement of the program was accompanied by an unequivocal statement by Nelson that: "We need not have clothes rationing in the United States.

"There is an adequate supply of textile products to meet all military and essential civilian needs. The major problem is to see that the proper distribution and use is made."

"Don'ts" for Public

Nelson pointed out that the consuming public has an "important" part in the program. This part, he said, consists of:

"Don't buy more than you need. Don't buy it before you need it. Make it last as long as you can."

Announcement of the program followed by a month the relaxation of manufacturing restrictions on wool because of what was generally admitted as "ample" supplies for all necessary needs.

Nelson's six-point program is:

1. Greater Production—Steps have been taken not only to maintain but increase production of essential textiles by (a) three-shift operation of all mills which can do so, (b) protection of labor supply already aided by the War Manpower Commission's declaration that textile manufacturing is essential, and (c) action by WPB to insure adequate flow of materials to mills and prompt attention to requests for repair and maintenance equipment.

2. Orderly and Adequate Distribution—Adjustment of retail sales promotion methods is to be made to assure wise buying, elimination of "fear of scarcity" advertising.

3. More "Volume" Merchandise—Simplification of fabric construction and a reduction in the number of sizes and varieties of fabrics is to be pressed along with a return to mass production which low-priced clothing followed but abandoned to a large extent when production costs rose.

4. Allocation of Materials to Essential Needs—First step is special allocation of yarns and fab-

Americans Beat Nationals, 5 to 3

The American League team, without a Yankee in the line-up, last night defeated the National League, 5-3, in the All-Star baseball game before 31,000 fans in Philadelphia. By virtue of the victory, the American Leaguers continued their mastery over the older circuit in the eleventh annual All-Star game. Dutch Leonard of the Washington Nats was the starting and winning pitcher. The losing pitcher was Mort Cooper of the Cardinals. Story on Page 16.

Capital Setting Dizzy Pace In Drinking, Bishop Charges

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Chicago, July 13.—Washington is setting the pace for the Nation in war-time drinking with the per capita consumption of alcoholic beverages in the National Capital now twice as great as that of any other American city, Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, former senior bishop of the Methodist Church and head of the Washington area of this denomination, charged here today.

"Drinking and drunkenness in Washington are fearful," said Bishop Hughes in an interview preceding a meeting of the Council of Bishops of the church. He added that a crime and vice wave was sweeping the Capital as a direct result of the heavy indulgence in liquor.

Bishop Hughes declared that the per capita liquor consumption in Washington was even twice that of Nevada, which he said had for many years held the title of "leading the American booze parade."

"Nevada can't see Washington now for the dust when it comes to imbibing," he said.

"Washington likes to blame it on the visitors. Most of Washington is composed of outsiders nowadays, but it is strange that those who flocked to Washington just happened to be people of extraordinary alcoholic capacity and desire.

"I don't know who is to blame, but the fact remains that the Capital is head over heels in indulgence and all that goes with it. Crime and vice run high, with leaders in the city predicting trouble, and you can lay much of the blame on the liquor traffic for it."

Bishop Hughes, who headed the Board of Temperance of the Methodist Church before his retirement in 1940, was asked whether he felt that young people were responsible for the high consumption of liquor in Washington and the increase in vice.

"Don't blame the young folks," he answered. "There are plenty of middle-aged and old people who have gone crazy in indulgence in all kinds of evil."

He said that, in contrast to Washington conditions, a religious reawakening appeared to be in the making in the armed forces under the guidance of the Army and Navy chaplains.

Bishop Hughes, who retired in 1940, was appointed tonight by the Council of Bishops to serve as head of the Washington area until a successor to Bishop Adna W. Leon-

16 Robbery Suspects Seized In Raids After Many Holdups

Spurred on by a series of weekend highway robberies which were climaxed by the slaying of a Navy Yard employe, detectives early yesterday staged a half-dozen whirlwind raids on beer and pool parlors, arresting 16 suspects, four of whom were charged with robbery.

None of the captives could be connected with the bludgeoning of Thomas H. White, 38, of 67 Randolph Place Northwest, the police said. It is believed, however, between 25 and 30 street hold-ups will be solved by the arrests.

Last night, detectives sent notices to 100 victims of recent robberies asking them to appear at Police Headquarters tonight to view the suspects at a line-up. Numerous identifications are expected.

Despite the police raids early yesterday, another man was reported beaten and robbed by three men who broke into his apartment, slugged him and took $8.

Wallace Douglas of 2737 Devonshire Place Northwest, told police the men entered his apartment and asked for a drink. While his back was turned, he said, one of them hit him over the head and took his wallet.

Divided into groups, the detectives began the wholesale roundup shortly after midnight. They entered places in the First, Second and Ninth Precincts. More than 50 Negro men were questioned and released before 11 Negroes were held.

Another squad seized five white youths in and around Franklin Park in connection with recent robberies in that area. They, too, will appear at the line-up tonight. None of the latter group had been charged last night.

Three Negro men pleaded guilty before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage yesterday afternoon and were held for the grand jury. A fourth man demanded a hearing, and was held under $5000 bail. His case was continued two weeks.

Little Steel Plan Assailed

Longshoremen Ask Rollback On Food or End of Pay Ceiling

By the Associated Press

New York, July 13.—The International Longshoremen's Association (A. F. L.) called upon the Federal Government today "to roll back prices or to abandon the 'Little Steel' formula."

The association adopted a resolution at the second session of its five-day annual convention stating: "American labor should no longer be asked to lower its standard of living in order to adhere to a mechanical formula which by this time has outlived its usefulness."

"Largely due to the fact the War Labor Board blindly holds to the so-called 'Little Steel' formula in adjudicating applications for wage increases," the resolution said, "labor and people of small income have borne the burden of the 25 per cent increase in the cost of living since July, 1941."

The resolution contended the formula "has placed the wage and salary earners in America in a position where rising costs of living have clearly outrun the limitations which originally gave rise to that formula," and added that it "has worked great hardship upon millions of American workers, despite the much-publicized high wages in a few industries."

The "Little Steel" formula limits wage increases to 15 per cent above January, 1941, levels, to compensate for cost of living increases between January 1, 1941, and May 1, 1942.

In his president's report, Joseph P. Ryan told the convention the President Declares Congress Erred in Ordering Trio Fired

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt yesterday rebuked Congress as having overstepped its Constitutional powers in ordering the discharge of three Federal employes and said he did not regard the legislative action as binding on the other two branches of Government.

Mr. Roosevelt told newsmen he will so inform Congress in a message already prepared and ready for delivery at the end of the present congressional recess.

Criticizing the legislative "firings" as unwise and discriminatory as well as unconstitutional, the President read excerpts from the forthcoming message. He did not release the text. He said that would be discourteous to Congress.

If there had been any way in which he could have vetoed what he termed an objectionable rider to the urgent deficiency bill without holding up the pay of nearly everybody in the Government, the President told reporters he would have done so.

The three people whom the urgent deficiency bill "fires" by name as of November 15, 1943, unless they are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, are Dr. Robert Morss Lovett, Government secretary to the Virgin Islands, and Goodwin B. Watson and William E. Dodd, jr., both of the Federal Communications Commission.

These subordinate officials were accused of affiliation with allegedly "subversive" groups by the Kerr subcommittee of the House Ap-

Drive Lags, Nazis Admit; Lunge Fails

Weather Blamed By Berlin as Push Slows on 9th Day; Reds Cite Losses

By the Associated Press

London (Wednesday) July 14 (AP).—The badly mauled German army, now stopped cold on the northern sector of the Central Front, did not even attempt a large-scale attack Tuesday in the Orel-Kursk sector, Moscow declared early today, and it lost 96 tanks and 1100 men in a futile plunge in the Belgorod area to the south.

Moscow's midnight bulletin indicated that the German offensive had begun to sap Nazi resources on its ninth day. Even Berlin said its drive had slowed, attributing its difficulties to "the weather."

Moscow's explanation of Germany's failure to crack the Red army lines was the Nazi loss of 2772 tanks and 1187 planes, and tens of thousands of casualties in the fighting to date.

Tank Forces Attack

London, July 13. — Severely mauled German tank forces attacked with great resolve north of Belgorod tonight after firm Russian defenses south of Orel had frustrated Marshal Guenther von Kluge's thrust on Kursk from the north.

Belgorod is the southern anchor of the violently erupting central front, where in eight days the Russians say they have ground up 2622 tanks, 1126 planes and tens of thousands of men from the 30 divisions hurled against them. Only at Belgorod have the Russians acknowledged German gains, and they say the wedge, fashioned at enormous cost, is trifling.

Hitler May Be in Saddle

The sluggish pace of Germany's belated summer drive gave rise today to a report from a usually reliable foreign diplomatic source that Adolf Hitler had assumed control of the German offensive, relegating Von Kluge and the generals to the back seat again. This source said Hitler intended to broaden the Kursk offensive into a great gamble for a major breakthrough. Hitler was said to have taken charge July 8, three days after the attack was launched to forestall preparations of the Russians for an offensive of their own.

If the report were true (and there was no confirmation), military observers said they considered it one of the most fortuitous developments of the war.

Fuehrer's Mistakes

During the first campaign against Russia two years ago, Hitler was reported to have insisted on driving on Moscow against the advice of his generals, who thought it more prudent to retire to winter lines in face of the closing Russian winter. Last summer, he apparently made a similar mistake by trying to substantiate his boast that

Enemy Warships Driven Off; 300 Japanese Slain In Bitter Fighting

By Murlin Spencer
Associated Press Correspondent

Allied Headquarters in the Southwest Pacific (Wednesday) July 14 (AP).—With a Japanese task force thwarted in efforts to reinforce the beleaguered garrison at Munda and sent fleeing to the north, American ground troops on New Georgia have moved up cautiously against the enemy air base and met "stiffening resistance."

Today's communique confirmed that the second battle of Kula Gulf, which occurred in the darkness of Monday night and early Tuesday, was another smashing United States Naval victory, with an enemy cruiser and three destroyers definitely sunk and two other enemy destroyers probably sunk. This was the second time that American forces had used night assaults with devastating effect.

Our warships intercepted the enemy units and forced them to break off the engagement. There was no mention of any United States losses.

Toll of 300 Japs

(A Berlin broadcast recorded by N. B. C. in New York, quoted a Japanese communique, which said American forces have occupied the Island of Roviana and were bombed by Japanese planes. The broadcast said the island gave the Americans footing on two sides of the Kula Gulf.)

On New Georgia above and below Munda, the American invasion forces took a toll of 300 Japanese. A checkup on the previously reported destruction of an enemy garrison on the Enogai Inlet, 10 miles northeast of Munda, showed 150 killed. Many others were wounded.

Below New Georgia, near American-held Vanguna Island, occupied early in the current operations, "our surface craft and shore parties on the northeast coast destroyed 3 enemy barges containing 150 troops," the communique said. It was believed that these troops were remnants of the original Japanese force on Vanguna Island, which fled when Americans landed.

Four Zeros Shot Down

Upon Munda itself, the United States air force kept up its daily series of attacks. In the latest report today, torpedo and dive-bombers struck at antiaircraft positions and enemy camps with 32 tons of heavy explosives.

The Japanese made an attempt to bomb our assault forces but their 18 divebombers, which had an escort of 10 Zeros, were forced to jettison their bombs over Langsdale Point. Four Zeros were shot down. One American plane was lost.

Airmen Hurl 3 New Attacks At Kiska Base

Report of Raid On Paramushiro Is Unconfirmed

John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

The Navy announced yesterday three new bombing attacks on the Jap base on Kiska, while Secretary Knox would neither deny nor confirm reports of an American air raid on the enemy base at Paramushiro, hundreds of miles to the west.

An official communique told of the latest air attacks on Kiska Island in the Aleutians Monday, stating that Army Liberator heavy bombers and Mitchel and Venture medium bombers had pounded Kiska's main camp areas and enemy installations at North Head.

Bad weather conditions prevented observation of results, it was said. North Head is at the mouth of Kiska Harbor and presumably includes coastal guns covering the port entrance.

Paramushiro Big Base

If American planes have struck Paramushiro, it will be the first time we have bombed this big enemy base in the Kurile Islands. The mountainous, fog-bound Kuriles run for 800 miles roughly north and south from Russian Kamchatka to Hokushu, one of the main group of Japanese islands.

Secretary Knox was questioned about the base at his press conference yesterday. A reporter said that he "understood there was an American airplane attack on Paramushiro," asking if he had "heard anything about it."

"Nothing that I can say," replied Knox.

"Nothing that you can say?" he was asked.

"That's right," the Secretary answered. "Nothing that I can talk about."

"But you don't deny it," the reporter continued.

"I don't deny it or affirm it," Knox said.

Attack Long Expected

Informed persons here have been expecting American aerial raids on Paramushiro sooner or later. The island—55 miles long by 12 miles miles wide—lies 861 nautical miles west of our Amchitka base in the Aleutians, and 630 nautical miles southwest of Attu Island, where Army and Navy engineers have been understood to

Ferry Ports On Italy, Sicily Heavily Raided

By Clinton Green
International News Service Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, July 13.—Giant American four-engine bombers were revealed today to have battered the Sicilian and Italian terminals of the Strait of Messina ferry in a blistering aerial campaign to cut off the island from Italy.

Roaring from French North Africa in direct support of invasion, Flying Fortresses pounded the Sicilian terminus at Messina in a devastating wave-bombing assault.

At the same time, the greatest force of Liberator bombers ever sent from the Middle East poured a record-breaking load of explosives on the twin Italian mainland ferry terminals of Reggio Calabria and San Giovanni, just across the 2-mile-wide Strait of Messina.

Joining in the campaign to isolate Sicily from the mainland, Allied torpedo bombers frustrated an enemy attempt to sneak reinforcements to the island's hard-pressed garrisons by intercepting several Italian troop convoys. In scathing wave-top torpedo attacks, the planes sank two Axis merchantmen and damaged a third, scored hits on two large troopships and left two enemy destroyers blazing from stem to stern.

Antiaircraft fire was heavy over all heavy bomber targets, but only one big craft was lost.

The announcement from an Allied air force post said:

"The Axis has been trying desperately to reinforce Sicily, but the attempts have been frustrated to the extent of a considerable number of troops and tons of equipment which have been sent to the bottom of the Mediterranean."

Flier Laments Lack Of Axis Opposition

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, July 13 (AP).—Neither Fortresses nor Liberators reported any fighter opposition in the heavy blows upon Messina, Reggio Calabria and San Giovanni today, and one pilot lamented:

"It's getting so tough you have to fight your way through your own squadron to get a crack at the enemy."

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, July 13.—British troops swarmed ashore today near Catania, within sight of Mount Etna, midway up the eastern Sicilian coast toward Messina, and also captured the port of Augusta, while the crack Hermann Goering Division tried to halt spreading American gains on the Allied left flank to the southwest.

Altogether the Allies captured five more towns today for a total of 15 in their swift invasion; behind them supply troops were bringing food for Sicilians.

Rushing from the interior to stiffen Italy's Fourth Livorno Division, Goering's troops collided for the first time in force with the Americans under Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton, jr., Sunday near Gela.

Operating With Precision

The Americans knocked out 10 old-type German Mark IV tanks and swept inland 20 miles to [illegible] British and Canadian armies at Ragusa to form a solid junction throughout southeastern Sicily along primary and secondary roads. Floridia and Palazzolo fell to the British and Canadians in their swift drive inland from captured Syracuse to join hands with the Americans.

Goering's troops were believed reforming for another slash at the Americans.

In their onrushing conquest the three Allied armies under Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower were operating with precision, fed by a flow of ships bridging the Mediterranean.

This efficiency was illustrated in an official announcement at a command post that supplies for the civilian population already had been unloaded in Sicily. Particular foods, and cigarettes which had been rationed severely under Axis rule, were among the cargoes to be distributed in the wake of Allied troops.

Rushing to Counterattack

Axis captives were mounting in number, more than 6000 being taken. Four lieutenant colonels walked into Allied lines to surrender, and Gen Achilles D'Avet, commander of the 206th Italian Coastal Division, was captured—the first ranking enemy officer

Rommel Shot Down On Way to Sicily, German Report

London, July 13 (AP).—A roundabout and wholly unconfirmed report said tonight that Field Marshal Erwin Rommel was shot down by Allied fighter pilots on his way to Sicily Tuesday. There has been no Allied claim of such an incident.

The report was said to have originated with the German underground radio station "Atlantic," which was quoted by the Swedish newspaper Svenska Dagsbladet.

According to this version, Rommel was said to have been traveling in a transport plane.

The report many have sprung from a Malta dispatch which reported Spitfires shot down a Junkers-52 transport escorted by 30 fighters over the Sicilian coast. Six of the fighter escort were also shot down.

French Chef Gives 'G. I.' Lunch Just Right Dash of Luster

By Jerry Klutz
The Federal Diary Editor

A French chef—one of the best—has been hired away from New York's swanky Savoy-Plaza Hotel to help prepare tastier, more decorative, more enjoyable and more economical 35-cent plates for Federal employes.

He's Pierre Berard and he's a chief to his fingertips. He has the typical French mustache, a twinkle in his eye, he can't talk without gestures, and he kisses the food.

Pierre has spent the last 10 years studying American tastes. He has served as chef at the New Yorker Hotel, the Drake and Blackstone Hotels in Chicago and the Roosevelt Hotel in New Orleans.

He has won so many cooking awards he can't remember them all. However, he prizes the medal he received from the former democratic government of his native France for excellence in cookery. It was a rare distinction, as Pierre gave up his loyalty to France to become an American citizen.

He won the Ahrens Award in 1933 for a trip to his native Paris for his 1900 recipes and formulas on American cooking. The contest ran over an entire year and most of the Nation's outstanding chefs participated in it. Pierre also has won grand prizes of the Chefs Association and the Les Amis d'Escoffier. He's a delegate at large of the Friends of Gourmet.

When I walked into the Navy Department cafeteria on Constitution Avenue yesterday I noticed a huge Negro chef throwing a kiss to a platter of food as he sent it out to be served to Navy employes.

"That's Pierre's influence working already," explained the supervisor, who was showing me around.

Pierre was at work fixing Salisbury steaks with his own personal formula. The seasoning had to be just so and he assured me that the employes wouldn't need salt and pepper with their steaks.

"I'd fire the waitress who puts salt and pepper on a table with one of my meals. The flavoring," he explained, "must be in the cooking."

Pierre tried out a new dish on Navy Department employes yesterday, a fluffy baked potato. The baked potatoes were scooped out and mixed with his recipe of cheese, eggs, parsley, butter and whatnot and then placed back in the potato covers and allowed to bake for a few moments.

He would jump from one kitchen helper to another, telling them how to roll meat, cut fish, decorate salads, and prepare desserts.

"There won't be any bones in this fish by cutting it this way," he told the helper, and then he turned to me to say that the cafeteria could get many more servings from the fish and the employe would get a better piece when a

Martinique Joins the Allies; Hoppenot Succeeds Robert

(President Hails French People on Bastille Day. Page 3.)

By Edward T. Folliard

Martinique, a Caribbean question mark for three years, has joined the Allies in the war against the Axis.

The State Department announced yesterday that Admiral Georges Robert, who tried to hold Martinique and Guadeloupe for the Vichy regime, had agreed to relinquish his authority to a representative of the French Committee of National Liberation—Henri Hoppenot.

Hoppenot is expected to arrive in Fort-de-France today, which happens to be the anniversary of the day on which the Bastille fell in 1789.

Hoppenot has assured the United States Government, the State Department said, that the French islands will take part to the "fullest extent" in the war against the Axis, along with French Africa and other parts of the empire which are free of Axis domination.

He gave specific assurances that French warships and merchant ships in the islands "will be made available in the prosecution of the war effort."

The warships are the aircraft carrier Bearn, the light cruiser Emile Bertin, and the training cruiser Jeanne d'Arc. The Bearn was on her way from Halifax to France with a cargo of 90 American-made planes when she got orders in mid-Atlantic to turn about and head for Martinique. France

Battle Yet to Come, Says Axis of Sicily

War Sidelights

Torn 'Chute Lands Flier In Sicily

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, July 13.—The luckiest "bailer-outer" of the American Air Forces was believed roaming behind enemy lines in Sicily last night, driving an Axis truck and trying to fight his way to Allied positions.

The pilot of an A-36 on a bombing mission was attacked by an Italian fighter, and as he eased out of his damaged craft, his parachute caught on the fuselage, and split.

Like a stone the pilot dropped toward the earth. Fellow fliers hovering above held their breath. He came down between two buildings. Remnants of the torn chute caught on a roof ledge a few feet from the ground and his fall was broken. He hung dangling for a moment. Then he disengaged himself, dropped unscathed, and began running toward an enemy truck. That's the last his comrades saw of him.

Britain Decorates Yank

London (Wednesday), July 14 (AP). In recognition of "gallant and distinguished service" on operations which remain a military secret, Flying Officer Harold Fesler Marting of Indianapolis, Ind., a former United States marine now in the Royal Air Force, has been awarded the British Military Cross, it was announced today.

The mission on which Marting won his decoration will not be disclosed until after the war, the Air Ministry said.

Marting, 32, was a corporal in the Marines from 1927 until 1931. He enlisted in the Royal Canadian Air Force in 1940, trained in Canada, and was commissioned a pilot in 1941.

Foe Out to Annihilate Invaders, Berlin Radio Declares

By the Associated Press

London, July 13.—The Berlin radio said today that "the second phase" of the battle for Sicily has begun and the Axis is out to annihilate the invaders.

The radio called this phase "much more dangerous for the attackers" and added "it remains to be seen how far their strong naval concentrations will be able to relieve the strain during the next few days of heavy fighting."

Both Berlin and Rome agreed that the main battle is coming and predicted the Allies would meet earnest opposition.

Guenter Weber, a Transocean news agency correspondent, quoted in a Berlin broadcast, said the Axis troops have entrenched themselves outside the range of the Allied naval artillery and have the advantage of an inner fighting line.

Gayda in Same Groove

"Of course, we are only in the beginning of a great battle; extremely fierce fighting, the outcome of which will change from time to time, awaits the Axis forces as well as the enemy," he said.

Landing forces have been beaten back from the interior everywhere, Gayda said, and were merely moving along the coast under the protection of naval artillery.

A Rome radio summary of Italian newspaper comment called the fighting on Sicily "just as hard and serious as that in Russia and the Pacific" and warned that this attack "against our island may be the start of the invasion of the continent."

The German Radio Military Commentator, Capt. Ludwig Sertorius, hinted at possible new Allied attacks against southern Europe with forces "perhaps stronger than landed on Sicily.

Sertorius yesterday had reported seven Allied divisions in Sicily, and then today said three more had been put ashore last night and Monday. The broadcasts were recorded by the Associated Press.

Sertorius said the 10 Allied divisions—by his estimate—in Sicily were "far from half" of the effectives in North Africa and that the Allies had used "at most" two-thirds of their avaliable shipping tonnage for Sicilian attack.

"The enemy is in a position to throw everything he has into Sicily or land at other points in southern Europe with a mass of troops at least as strong and perhaps stronger than those landed in Sicily," he said.

The Nazis meanwhile started to decry the value of Sicily—an indication that they felt it eventually would be lost to the Axis.

Berlin broadcasts for home consumption said Sicily was not "decisive for the conquest of Europe," denied that it marked the beginning of the attack on Europe, and said the Sicilian invasion "ties up large Allied forces."

Berlin kept up a barrage of optimistic reports on Sicily, but Rome, with the danger nearer to hand, was more soberly reticent.

Rome Issues Pep Talks

Italian home broadcasts this afternoon were confined to reports on "repulse to the enemy at several points," and pep talks on morale and the spirit of "the brave Italian soldiers."

There were indications that the teamwork between the Berlin and Rome propaganda machines was breaking under stress of the first Allied thrust into Europe.

Hours after Italians issued the gloomy report on the fall of Augusta, Berlin's international information bureau was telling the world that "on the whole neither the Americans nor the British have succeeded in gaining any ground beyond the initial success of the first day."

Island group was blasted by 24 tons of bombs and nearer Munda its supply depot at Vila on Kolombangara was raided again.

In a far-ranging arc extending from the Solomons, our air forces dropped a total bomb weight of more than 128 tons.

In northeastern New Guinea, where Australian and American jungle fighters are infiltrating within less than 12 miles of the enemy air base of Salamaua, that objective as well as the air base of Lae above it were struck with great weights of bombs.

Liberators, Flying Fortresses and Mitchells bombed and strafed airdromes at both places.

More than 50 tons were aimed at Salamaua's airdrome and at the town itself. Twenty-one tons of bombs fell on Lae and its airdromes.

258 Jap Planes Total

In a delayed report on air fighting over Rendova Island, south of New Georgia, on July 11, four more Japanese fighters and a medium bomber were added to the number shot down.

These five and the four bagged over Langsdale Point made a total of 258 planes listed in communiques since the new offensive opened June 30 as destroyed or probably destroyed. Our losses in that time, including the plane loss reported today, amount to 62.

The communique's report on the pincers being closed from the north and east on Munda did not specify distances but last reports placed our advanced patrols east of that air base within less than 2 miles of the landing strip.

In the latest naval defeat of the enemy in the central Solomons it was believed that some other Japanese warships were in the vicinity but declined to join battle.

The second Navy battle in the Kula Gulf offered further evidence that the American Navy has taken over the night fighting tactics used by the Japanese last fall around Guadalcanal.

In two night clashes, just a week apart, the Navy sank at least 13, and possibly more than 17, enemy cruisers and destroyers seeking to halt the American offensive in the central Solomons.

Compared with the naval night fighting around Guadalcanal the situation now is reversed to some extent. Then the enemy was on the counteroffensive, seeking to recapture Guadalcanal. Now he is on the defensive, attempting to prevent the capture of his strategic air base at Munda.

The night fighting, a daring and deadly business, makes it strictly a test of ships against ships. Air support for either side is eliminated by the darkness. In the Kula Gulf battles, it apparently was ship against ship. There was no mention of airplane activity in connection with the engagements in the communiques from the headquarters of Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

A.P. Correspondent Wounded By Jap Shell in New Guinea

William F. Boni Hit By Splinters; Said To Be Slightly Hurt

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters in the Southwest Pacific, July 13.—William F. Boni, Associated Press war correspondent in New Guinea, received nine shell splinter wounds in an attack by Japanese planes on the Salamaua front, the Associated Press Australian Bureau was informed today. Boni is being treated at an advanced field hospital near the battle scene.

In a brief message dispatched here through Gen. Douglas MacArthur's press relations office, Boni described his wounds as "superficial." They resulted from the bombing and strafing by low-flying enemy aircraft of a barge in which the correspondent was leaving Nassau Bay, 12 miles below Salamaua and the scene of American landings June 30.

Photographer Unhurt

Acme Photographer Carl Thusgaard, who came through the Japanese attack unhurt, reached Port Moresby, New Guinea, yesterday with the information.

Thusgaard's message added that Boni was expecting to be moved to Port Moresby.

Boni, Thusgaard and other press representatives proceeded to Nassau Bay as soon as they were permitted after American troops made their surprise landing on the coast south of Salamaua.

Boni, who is the first member of the Associated Press' Australian bureau to be wounded in action, arrived in the Southwest Pacific theater last November.

Boni twice previously has been hospitalized during his 8½-month tour of duty as a war corespondent—once after the jeep in which he was riding overturned, and a second time after he succumbed to malaria contracted while covering the war in New Guinea.

Drive on Reds Slowed, Nazis Admit

Stalingrad would fall. He lost upward of 350,000 men on the Volga, gave Germany her greatest defeat of the war, and set the stage for the most devastating of Russian counteroffensives.

On the raging Belgorod front the Russians said they even had recovered some lost ground in whittling down a German wedge that had been driven into Red Army lines.

No Nazi Gain Recorded

Although the Germans were said to be trying to "achieve success at any cost" in that narrow salient, the bulletin recorded by the Soviet monitor did not concede a single German gain. The enemy seized one village during the day, it said, but a Russian counterattack restored the position.

"The enemy sustained heavy losses in manpower and equipment," it added. Aside from the 96 tanks destroyed, the enemy was said to have lost 350 trucks and large numbers of troops.

The Germans attacked one village defended by a crack Red guard unit twenty times during the day, but the communique said: "The guardsmen destroyed tanks, killed 300 of the enemy, and did not yield a step."

Foes' Strategy Foiled

The original German strategy, upon launching the offensive, had been to strike south of Orel and north of Belgorod to pinch off the Kursk salient in the middle. This salient juts westward toward the Bryansk-Kiev Railway and is a distinct threat to the Germans. It was seized at the climax of the big Russian winter drive which began at Stalingrad on the Volga.

After nine days' heavy fighting in which the Germans have used nearly 500,000 men and thousands of tanks, there is not the slightest indication that the Germans have gained any sizable territory. They have been unable to widen a wedge driven north of Belgorod because of constant Russian counterattacks.

Yanks Landed Despite Heavy Seas

An Allied Command Post in the Mediterranean, July 13 (INS).—Allied Fleet Commander Admiral Andrew Browne Cunningham, who revealed today that heavy ground swells were encountered by American landing parties when the Sicilian invasion was launched, said:

"It was impossible for the small boats to land, but the Americans did it."

Americans Make Friends in Sicily

An Allied Command Post in North Africa, July 13 (AP).—American troops encamped at Licata, Sicilian southern coast town which they captured after two hours' fighting, find the Sicilians very friendly," returning officers reported tonight.

Children are already using slang expressions like "Okay, Joe," and holding up the two-finger "V for victory," they said.

The fliers had photographed the island from one end to the other, completing the job after the fall of Tunis. Part of the time they used captured German photographic supplies and equipment.

French Diplomats in China Quit Vichy

Chungking, July 13 (AP).—The Vichy government's representatives in Chungking have informed the Chinese foreign office that they have shifted their allegiance to the French Committee of National Liberation, it was disclosed today.

The representatives are headed by Charge d'Affaires Jean Paul-Boncour, nephew of former Premier Joseph Paul-Boncour. A French gunboat, the only unit of the French fleet in China waters, was taken over by the Liberation French at the suggestion of the crew.

R. A. F. Raids Turin In 2000-Mile Flight

Planes From Britain Blast Italian City; Defense Weak, But Weather Downs 13 Ships

By Lowell Bennett
International News Service Staff Writer

London, July 13.—Italy's foremost armaments-making center of Turin was littered with fresh debris today after Britain-based R. A. F. heavy bombers, lending support to the invasion of Sicily, last night battered the north Italian Royal Arsenal city for its heaviest assault of the war.

The devastating raid was carried out by a large formation, mostly made up of Lancaster four-engine giants, some of which negotiated a circuitous 2000-mile round-trip journey to fulfill their mission, while others flew on to "undisclosed bases" after dropping their loads.

Big buildings and rail facilities vital for the transit of men and material from Germany into Italy crumpled under the shattering weight of hundreds of tons of bombs, and enormous fires mushroomed up into the summer sky. The assault and attendant operations during the night cost the R. A. F. 13 bombers which failed to return.

Rome acknowledged "considerable damage" was wrought to the very center of Turin, which is sometimes called "Italy's Detroit." The Italian high command listed 101 dead and 203 wounded.

Defenses Reported Weak

Crewmen of the Lancasters that returned to home bases reported that Turin's defenses were extraordinarily weak, suggesting that the metropolis was being stripped of antiaircraft guns and night fighters to rush the mdown to southern Italy and Sicily for defense against the Allied invasion.

One Lancaster pilot reported hovering over the target area for ten minutes without any interference by antiaircraft guns.

The bombing was described as "very heavy and concentrated." Numerous two-ton blockbusters were rained down on the Italian industrial bastion.

Two Crash in Switzerland

The fact that the antiaircraft opposition was described as weak but nevertheless 13 bombers were lost was attributed more to the storms en route than to enemy fire. Swiss dispatches said at least two of the British bombers crashed in Switzerland, with 12 crewmen killed.

After the raid, the Air Ministry said, the R. A. F. heavyweights "dispersed." Some returned to Britain over the Atlantic, taking a more westerly route than the flight to the target across the Alps. Others cut back all the way diagonally across France, and still others "went to undisclosed bases," the ministry said.

The mention that some bombers went to "undisclosed bases" recalled the raid on Friedrichshaven last month in which Lancasters from Britain flew on to North Africa after dropping their bombs. On their return, the Italian navy base at La Spezia was bombed.

Whether this "shuttle route" had again been used after the Turin raid was not revealed.

Coincident with the attack on Turin, R. A. F. fighter-bombers during the night staged what were officially termed "extensive intruder patrols" over France, Belgium and Holland. In the morning R. A. F. fighters renewed these sweeps, jabbing at France.

French on Sicily, Giraud Discloses

New York, July 13.—Gen. Henri Honore Giraud, commander of the French forces in North Africa, in a speech to 1200 cadets today at the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., disclosed for the first time that "some French troops" are fighting with the Allies in Sicily.

He did not say how many such troops had joined the attack nor whether they were fighting as a separate contingent or as part of the British or American forces.

Roosevelt Voices French Unity Plea

Lauds Nation's Ideals in Bastille Day Message

On the eve of Bastille Day, President Roosevelt made an indirect plea last night for French unity, declaring that France "transcends all parties, personalities and groups."

"There can be one symbol only for Frenchmen—France itself," he said in a statement.

The President in honor of the 154th anniversary today of the storming of the Bastille, monarchial prison, in the French Revolution assured the French people anew that they will be allowed to erect a government of their own choice once the enemy is driven from their soil.

He said last week that he did not think the question would arise of recognizing the National Committee of Liberation, jointly headed by Gens. Henri Honore Giraud and Charles de Gaulle, as the French government.

Text of Statement

The President's statement:

"The fourteenth of July is, for all the peoples of the world devoted to the ideals of liberty, a day of celebration. We observe it this year, here in the United States, with special fervor. Immortal France has reaffirmed once again, in the most heroic circumstances, her greatness and her glory.

"On this anniversary of the winning by the French people of their liberties, I wish to recall again that the fundamental principles which guide our democracies were evolved from the American and the French revolutions. The keystone of our democratic structure is the principle which places governmental authority in the people, and in the people only. There can be one symbol only for Frenchmen—France herself. She transcends all parties, personalities and groups: They live indeed only in the glory of French nationhood.

One of War Aims

"One of our war aims, as set forth in the Atlantic Charter, is to restore the mastery of their destinies to the peoples now under the invaders' yoke. There must be no doubt, anywhere, of the ualterable determination of the United Nations to restore to the oppressed peoples their full and sacred rights.

"French sovereignty resides in the people of France.

"Today, this people is shackled by barbaric oppression. In the freedom of tomorrow, when Frenchmen and their brothers in arms of the United Nations have cleansed French soil of the enemy, the French people will again give expression to their freedom in the erecting of a government of their own free choice.

"Long live liberty, equality, fraternity. May France live forever!"

Sent to War

Mere Boys Among Nazi Prisoners

By the Associated Press

A North African Port, July 13.—American soldiers marched 100 Italians and 30 Germans from a prisoner ship, just back from Sicily to a prison camp three miles away.

With a mile yet to go, several prisoners were in such bad condition they had to be loaded into trucks where they sat with their flushed faces in their hands.

The Germans were startingly young, so young that an American officer of youthful appearance himself remarked "they look like a bunch of high school kids. Who in the world had enough nerve to send them to war?"

These young Nazis were mostly slender, blond, red-faced. Observers agreed they must have been easy pickings for the tough American outfit that captured them.

The German youngsters quickly faded under the same merciless sun under which the Americans have been working and training for weeks in heavy woolen clothing and full field packs. The German youths wore shorts and light cotton shirts open at the neck. Still they faded and faltered, although the pace set for them was absurdly slow, scarcely more than a leisurely stride.

The Italian prisoners, unkempt as usual, sauntered along carelessly. Some had cracks in their boots, most lacked socks, and those who did possess them had obviously gotten them from civilian stores, since they were of all colors and materials.

Augusta Subdued By Greek Warship, Writer Says

London (Wednesday), July 14 (AP).—A London Daily Express correspondent reported in a dispatch written "on a cruiser off Augusta, July 12," that Augusta, Sicily, was subdued by a Greek destroyer.

The correspondent said that Augusta, a town with a normal population of 17,000, had been evacuated after a naval bombardment and "only one man" could be found in it later.

Nineteen miles north of Syracuse, the fortified city of Augusta stands on a rocky islet joined by a bridge to a peninsula projecting into the Mediterranean sea.

Government Wheat Offered for Livestock

The Commodity Credit Corporation said yesterday it is again offering Government-owned wheat for sale as livestock feed to meet shortages.

Such sales were suspended between June 30, when the old congressional authority for the sales expired, and Monday, when President Roosevelt signed the new Agriculture Department supply bill giving new authority.

Sales will be made at 1 cent a bushel over June prices, but in no case at less than $1.05 a bushel.

Naval Battle Reported In Mediterranean

London (Wednesday), July 14 (INS).—The Madrid newspaper ABC reported in a Berlin dispatch today that a big naval battle is raging in the Mediterranean.

Luftwaffe's Weakness Diagnosed by Arnold As Result of Dispersal to Too Many Fronts

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, July 13.—What's wrong with the Luftwaffe?

Merely a matter of mathematics—a case of dividing a given force between a growing number of fronts, says Gen. H. H. Arnold, chief of the American Army Air Forces.

"Why is it (the Luftwaffe) not nearly so strong today?" The general echoed a newsman's question in an interview. "Well, take any number and divide it again and again, to care for all your increasing combat fronts, and you have decreasing air power on any one front. It's mathematics."

In the Polish and French campaigns, General Arnold pointed out, the Nazi air force functioned as a single unit.

The general, here on an inspection trip, had a good word for the P-40 Warhawk in discussing fighter aircraft.

"We've got to have ships that will equal or better the enemy's craft," he declared. "And one more thing: don't sell the P-40 short. It has shot down more ships than any other single fighter."

Arnold said there are now very few planes that Americans and British do not use in common, and he spoke of increasing cooperation between the two nations in the training of personnel and interchange of equipment.

Russia, he stated, is receiving American planes in large numbers every month, and seems "highly satisfied" with them. China, likewise, will be further supplied but, he added:

"You can only build China as fast as the planes will fly supplies in. We'll build the air force in China as fast as possible, but we have to do it in a balanced way."

He had this to say of assigning American flying personnel:

"The routes across the oceans run two ways. We're not keeping boys on the fighting front until they're worn out—we've brought more than 9000 officers and enlisted men of the A. A. F. back to the United States to help train new men. Even men who were injured are being utilized, for their training and experience can be useful in many ways.

"We've met the training figure so far, and I hope the manufacturers can uphold their end of the bargain."

Report Says Nazis Will Not Further Reinforce Italy

London, July 13 (AP).—The Morocco radio, quoting Turkish circles, said tonight that the Germans apparently have no intention of sending further reinforcements to Italy, but instead will concentrate their forces on frontiers likely to be threatened after Italy is defeated.

Reports from Istanbul, the radio added, also said the entire civilian population of the island of Crete has been evacuated by the Germans.

Sub Greenling Wins Citation

Allied Headquarters in the Southwest Pacific, July 13 (AP).—The submarine Greenling, credited with sinking 61,800 tons of enemy shipping and damaging 22,000 tons, has been presented the presidential unit citation by Vice Admiral Arthur S. Carpender, commander of the United States Seventh Fleet.

The citation praised "the aggressiveness and determination of officers and men of the Greenling." Comdr. Henry C. Bruton, U. S. N., was commanding officer of the submarine at the time of the action covered in the citation.

Yank Forces Beat Off Crack Nazi Unit; British Make New Landing Near Catania

(The London Daily Herald quoted an Algiers broadcast as saying that the Americans alone took 700 captives.)

This would indicate sagging Italian morale, but late aerial reconnaissance reported an important flow of Axis reinforcements, presumbably Germans among them, from the interior. They were rushing for the American positions on the Allied left flank. Patton's troops already had knocked out one serious enemy counterattack, but not before the enemy penetrated clear to the beaches.

The capture of Modica, 10 miles northwest of Ispica in southeast Sicily, was reported by Ross Munro, correspondent with Canadian forces.

"Town after town is surrendering," Munro cabled. "The lack of determined resistance is surprising even to the divisional staff. . . . The infantry is advancing with incredible speed and it is virtually impossible to keep in touch with their moves."

Munro said a clash with the Germans was expected and that "stern fighting" was likely.

Modica was the fifteenth important town captured by the Allies.

Would Mean Third Port

The new British landing near Catania was a significant development. Seizure of that port city at the southern foot of volcanic Mount Etna would put the Allies 55 miles from Messina, the northeastern ferry terminus only 6 miles from the Italian mainland.

Capture of the once flourishing ancient Greek city also would give the Allied navies a third port through which to pour men and supplies into the drive toward Messina. Syracuse was the first harbor to fall, then Augusta's capture was announced today. An official bulletin said Syracuse's dock installations apparently were undamaged.

(The London radio in a broadcast recorded by N. B. C. quoted Italian sources as "admittinb that Allied ships are now in the roadsteads at Catania."

(The Berlin radio said "a much more dangerous phase for the attackers" had begun in Sicily where "German and Italian measures for the annihilation of the landed enemy units are now in full swing." Rome radio's propaganda took the same line—that Axis troops entrenched in prepared positions back from the coast would have an advantage in approaching battles.)

Three thousand Allied ships of all kinds—more than three times the 850 used in the North Africa landings last fall—were shuttling back and forth between Tunisia and Sicily to swell the powerful Allied striking force.

Minesweepers already have cleared the minefields on the approaches to Syracuse and Augusta, which Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery's desert fighters seized with the aid of a strong bombardment from the sea.

Palazzolo is 20 miles west of Syracuse, and Ragusa is 12 miles southwest of Palazzolo. Both are strategic prizes because these road junctions dominate high ground in the area and deprive the Axis of much mobility.

The Americans appeared to be meeting the most stubborn opposition. They knocked out a considerable number of enemy tanks and took prisoners in the repulse of the one counterattack which broke through to the beaches, presumably in the Gela area.

Patton's troops reformed and sealed the gap, aided by the big guns of the fleet standing out to sea. In this engagement a sizable number of Germans participated—fighting furiously, in contrast to the Italians.

The four Italian lieutenant colonels who walked into Allied lines and surrendered declared they were "reconnoitering."

(A Vichy broadcast recorded by the Associated Press said more American troops were landing along the southern coast, but that Axis counterattacks were developing against the bridgeheads at Licata, Gela, Pachino and Augusta. In contrast to this latter assertion was a German radio acknowledgment that Allied troops now were advancing along the road from Augusta to Catania.)

Allied losses at Augusta were described officially as slight. The fall of the city of 25,000, which also served as Italian naval base, represented a 19-mile advance north of Syracuse.

Details of the British landing near Catania were not immediately available, but Allied warships were believed to have laid down a terrific barrage to facilitate the strike. Allied planes also lent their support.

Airmen already are operating from captured fields set amid Sicily's olive groves. Aided by the great flow of strength from the rim of Africa, these sky fighters were chopping holes in Axis road convoys, pulverizing supply dumps and razing airfields and ports farther inland.

Martinique Joins Allies, Hoppenot Succeeds Robert

The Jeanne d'Arc was an escort for the Bearn. The cruiser Emil Bertin, one of the fastest men-of-war in the world, crossed the Atlantic with a fortune in gold, estimated at 200 million dollars and upward, which is now in old Fort Desaix in Martinique.

Some Merchant Ships

The American-made planes which the Bearn unloaded at Martinique, and which were the cause of some alarm three years ago, have probably deteriorated to such an extent that they are probably without military value.

Besides the warships at Martinique and Guadeloupe, there are a number of merchant ships, including six or seven oil tankers.

Relief Supplies

The United States Government already is dispatching relief supplies to Martinique and Guadeloupe. Food shipments were cut off last winter when Admiral Robert stubbornly refused to join with other French colonies in breaking away from Vichy.

The State Department also announced that diplomatic relations were being resumed with the French islands.

Mr. Hoppenot, former French Minister to Uruguay, has been in Washington as a representative of Gen. Henri Honore Giraud on the French Military Mission. However, as he was appointed as Admiral Robert's successor by the French National Committee of Liberation, he also has the blessing of Gen. Charles de Gaulle. Giraud and De Gaulle are cochairmen of the committee.

Official Announcement

The announcement of the State Department follows:

"Mr. Henri Hoppenot, director of civil services of the French military mission in Washington, has informed the Department of State of his designation by the French Committee of National Liberation to assume the authority over the French Antilles. Admiral Robert recently expressed a desire to relinquish his authority.

"The acceptance of Mr. Hoppenot's designation for the express purpose of exercising the French authority in the Antilles is not to be construed as affecting either pro or con the question of this Government's relations with the French Committee of National Liberation.

"Mr. Hoppenot has assured the Government of the United States that the facilities and resources of the French Antilles will be devoted to the fullest extent to the prosecution of the war against the Axis, in accord with the action already taken by all French territory not under the domination of the enemy.

The military interests of the United States in the Caribbean zone are fully recognized. The use of all presently immobilized French naval and merchant ships will be made available in the prosecution of the war effort.

"On the basis of the new situation created by Mr. Hoppenot's designation, the Government of the United States is despatching relief supplies to Martinique and Guadeloupe and will cooperate with the new authority in the resumption of the economic life of the islands.

"Mr. Hoppenot and his assistants are expected to arrive at Martinique in the immediate future and upon his assumption of authority, relations with the French Antilles will be resumed through Consul General Marcel E. Malige, who is returning to his post."

Montgomery Told His Men Italians 'Asked for It'

London (Wednesday), July 14 (AP).—Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery told his British Eighth Army troops before they invaded Sicily "the time has come to carry the war into Italy and into the continent of Europe . . . They (the Italians) asked for it and now they will get it."

In the message released today by the Ministry of Information, General Montgomery declared: "The Italian overseas empire has been exterminated.

"We will now deal with the home country. To the Eighth Army has been given the great honor of representing the British Empire in the Allied force which is now to carry out its task.

"On our left will be our American allies. Together, we will set about the Italians in their own country in no uncertain way. They came into this war to suit themselves and they must take the consequences. They asked for it and now they will get it."

New Trouble Seen In Coal Situation

President to Turn Mines Back To Owners; Lewis May Protest

Likelihood of further labor trouble in the storm-torn coal industry arose yesterday when President Roosevelt told a press conference that the coal mines, now Government-operated, would be turned back to the private owners in compliance with a provision of the new Antistrike Act.

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, on June 22, put an end to the third general coal strike with the reservation that the Government itself continue to operate the mines throughout the truce, which was fixed by Lewis to last until October 31.

The arrangement to resume work said a statement by the union's policy committee, "is predicted upon operation of the mines and their collateral production units by the United States Government, and will automatically terminate if Government control is vacated prior to the above-mentioned date."

Didn't Recognize Deadline

President Roosevelt already had announced, on June 25, that he would not recognize the October 31 deadline fixed by Lewis, and yesterday he suggested that reporters read Section 3 of the recently enacted Smith-Connally Act to curb strikes and forbid entirely walkouts in plants or establishments taken over by the Government. Section 3 provides that such plants shall be restored to private hands as soon as practicable and in no event later than 60 days after their "productive efficiency" has been restored.

The President said the Government would comply with the law. He did not reveal what steps the Government would take if a new general walkout should start when the mines go back to private possession, but he did call attention to a provision of the antistrike law requiring 30 days' notice before any strike can be called in plants not in Government possession.

There was nothing to indicate when the mines might be relinquished by the Government, particularly in view of the continuing insurgent strike that has kept a number of properties from operating.

Coal Ordered for Plants

Earlier yesterday Secretary of Interior Ickes, as fuels administrator, ordered 135,000 tons of coal diverted to steel plants, and four more mines owned by steel companies resumed operations.

Both actions were on the eve of a special grand jury investigation at Pittsburgh into strikes which last week kept idle about 18,000 miners whose production normally fires steel furnaces.

Ickes said the diversion, at the rate of 22,500 tons daily this week, was to "relieve the growing paralysis of the steel industry due to coal mine strikes in western Pennsylvania" and was necessary to "keep war-vital plants in production."

The fuel, special-purpose metallurgical coals essential to steel manufacture, will go to plants of four major steel producers—Republic, Weirton, Jones nad Laughlin, and Carnegie-Illinois. Ickes estimated the diversions, from sources having adequate stocks or which could use other fuels, would return all these companies' plants to full operation except Carnegie-Illinois' Clairton plant. Further efforts are being made, he said, to care for its needs.

The return of workers to four Jones & Laughlin mines reduced the number of idle miners to about 10,000. For the first time in three weeks there was no picketing in the Monongahela River Valley.

There were 14 mines still down or operating on a partial basis. Ten of these belong to the H. C. Frick Coke Co., U. S. Steel subsidiary, which reported today's coal production at about 32 per cent of normal.

United States Attorney Charles F. Uhl disclosed at Pittsburgh that the Federal grand jury would convene in special session there tomorrow to deal with the strikers. He said the Federal Bureau of Investigation is conducting "an intensive investigation" into causes for continued refusal of miners to return to work.

Boards Penalize 5 Pleasure Drivers; 89 More Reported

Five more District residents were penalized for pleasure driving by their local ration boards, the District office of Price Administration announced yesterday.

At the same time, 89 alleged pleasure driving cases were reported to the OPA Monday night and yesterday.

Action in 19 cases was taken by three boards recently, District OPA said, and resulted in the dismissal of 11 cases. Because of failure to appear, two cases were postponed. The following were penalized:

Eben D. Willis of 3121 Sixteenth Street Northwest, lost 2 "A" coupons; George H. Sutherland of 1815 Ingleside Terrace, was deprived of 2 "A" and 2 "B" coupons, and Richord O. Reab of 1324 Park Road, had to give up 2 "A" coupons. Al lthree actions were taken July 5 by Board 30.

Board 60, meeting last Friday, took action against Lieut. H. P. Beach, jr., 3949 R Street Southeast, taking away 2 "A" coupons, and Edward Kerge, 2403 Nichols Avenue Southeast, who lost 3 "A" coupons.

New Riveting 'Gun' Saves 30% Time On Martin Planes

Baltimore, July 13 (AP).—Saving 30 per cent labor time on any piece of work essential to the war effort is an important contribution, and that is just what Glenn L. Martin Aircraft Co. officials say Charles J. Mellodge has done with riveting operations.

A single Martin Marauder bomber takes 400,000 rivets, the officials say, and Mellodge, a company inspector, has developed a gadget which eliminates time lost in picking up and placing rivets by hand prior to driving them home.

The time-saver is an automatic feeder into one end of which is dumped a quantity of rivets and through which they are passed along to the business end by air pressure.

A slight forward motion of the gun inserts the rivet and the riveter takes over from there.

So. America Needs Plane Parts, Says Lee

Latin-American countries, hampered geographically from developing railroads and bus systems, are completely capable of great advances in aviation, but vitally need plane parts and repair devices from the United States, Josh Lee, member of the Civil Aeronautics Board, told reporters after he climbed from a plane at National Airport Monday, ending a 30-day survey of South America.

"Naturally, no materials must be diverted from this country if by so doing the war effort would be impeded," Lee said. "But if we can spare some plane parts I am going to recommend to the CAB that they be sold to all the South American countries that need them."

If the equipment is sold by the United States, he declared, a great market would be built up and trade thus would be taken away from Germany.

He was "very favorably impressed with Panegra and Pan American Air Lines, he said, but pointed out their planes are wearing out and they require spare parts. This is particularly true in Mexico, Lee observed, where Gen. Salinas Caranza, head of aviation, is enthusiastic about developing Mexico's domestic air program but cannot carry it on without adequate repair facilities.

"The greatest difference between our own lines and those in South America is they have no night flying because they lack beacons and extensive communications," Lee said. "Just as our own civilian planes are without luxury devices, theirs, too, are stripped of all nonessentials."

The trip took Lee and Stuart Tipton, assistant counsel for CAB, to Mexico City, Panama, Ecuador, Peru, Chile, Buenos Aires, Rio de Janerio, Belim, Trinidad, and thence to Miami. On the same plane that brought them from Florida was Rexford G. Tugwell, Governor of Puerto Rico, who dodged reporters with promises to hold a press conference "within a few days."

Winter Oil Situation Eased, OPA Official Tells Senators

By the Associated Press

Joel Dean, director of the Price Administration Fuel Rationing Division, yesterday forecast a "radical improvement" in next winter's fuel oil supply situation under a streamlined distribution procedure.

He told a special Senate committee investigating the Midwest petroleum picture that while last year's overall allowances would be used as the basis of next winter's allocation of oil for heating, a better system would be in effect.

He said there would be these improvements in procedure:

1. Coupons upon which next winter's supply may be purchased will be in the hands of all users by the end of the month, making possible summer fill-ups of tanks.

"Tardy issuance of coupons last year presented one of the major difficulties," he said. Officials didn't decide to ration until last September.

2. A coupon good for the first heating period this winter may be used in the second period, if preferred, and the second may be carried until the third period, and so on.

Last year the coupons for each of the five heating periods were good only for the periods for which they were issued.

The committee, headed by Senator Clark (Democrat) of Missouri was told that a directive designed to assure all the Nation's farmers of their gasoline requirements had been prepared for issuance within a week. Walter Hochules, director of marketing for the Petroleum Administration for War made the announcement, saying the directive would put farmers "definitely within Class 2 along with the military."

A directive meeting farmers' requirements in the Eastern zone has been in effect since May, Hochules stated.

Report Proves Pilot Flew Back With 'No Plane at All'

A U. S. Bomber Base in England, July 13 (AP).—The pilot of the Flying Fortress Ruthie, Lieut. Robert L. Campbell of Liberty, Miss., has an engineering report of "total loss" to attest that he flew back from France July 4 with practically no plane at all—which was just how it felt. His story was made public today.

Enemy fire knocked out two of his engines just after the plane dropped bombs on Nantes and punctured two gas tanks, and the pilot had to pump fuel frantically into his two sound tanks before they ran out so there would be enough to make the coast of England.

More hits tore a part of the fuselage into shreds, knocked the wing flaps down into a braking position and turned out the ultimately wrecked hydraulic system and punctured one landing wheel tire.

President Bewails Selfish Pressure Groups

DURING his 17 years in Congress, veteran Representative Jed Johnson of Oklahoma has made a practice of calling on the incumbent President at the end of each session for a chat on legislative matters. A significant thing about these visits is that Johnson usually found the Chief Executive in an unhappy mood about Congress.

Coolidge always was glum and critical. He said he got no cooperation from the legislators. And when Johnson called on Hoover in early 1933, after his defeat, Hoover unleashed a ripping tirade to the effect that Congress was responsible for all the economic evils of that period.

President Roosevelt didn't entirely upset this tradition when Johnson visited him the day the Seventy-eighth Congress recessed for the summer. Roosevelt also was irked about Congress' wishy-washy attitude on inflation. However, Roosevelt was more philosophical than belligerent.

The President said that too many Congressmen were concerned about the prosperity of their own districts, instead of looking at the whole picture. This was true of both the farm and labor blocs in Congress, the President said, although the farm bloc was more strongly entrenched.

If pressure groups had their way, he added, we would have a repetition of conditions during the last war when corn rocketed to $1.44 a bushel and cotton sold for 40 cents a pound.

Should the Administration make a price concession on one commodity, the President remarked, there would be a stampede of demands for boosting price ceilings on all other commodities. This stampede would be difficult, if not impossible, to stop.

"It's the old story about the camel getting his nose under the tent, Jed," said the President. "Once he does it, the chances are he's going all the way in."

NOTE: The current price ceiling on corn is $1.07 a bushel while cotton is selling for about 18 cents a pound.

Gillette Boom Grows

THERE is more than meets the eye behind the backstage grooming of Senator Guy Gillette of Iowa to be President of the United States.

Despite the denials, Jim Farley let part of the cat out of the bag when he called an ultra secret luncheon of anti-Roosevelt Senators in the Capitol the other day to push Gillette's nomination.

But there is a lot more than Jim Farley behind the plan. Real fact is that Gillette's candidacy was first inspired and privately pushed by a group of wealthy Chicago businessmen who sponsored the America First Committee.

Jim Farley wasn't in on the ground floor with Gillette at first. He leaned toward Senator Harry Byrd of Virginia as the ideal Democrat to pick up Republican votes and defeat Roosevelt. However, when he saw the Chicago support and money for Gillette he was glad to go along.

The big money boys in Chicago who are pushing Gillette argue that food will be a tremendous political issue in the 1944 campaign, so a Midwesterner would be a better candidate.

They also point out that Gillette is on the Senate Agricultural Committee, where he has done a good job, and unquestionably showed the Administration some real pointers on synthetic rubber.

NOTE: This may be good strategy on paper, but whoever heard of the Republican Party nominating a Democrat when they could smell victory themselves. That's one reason the boys don't even warm up to Willkie.

Who Bore Ruml Baby?

BIGGEST chuckle Capitol Hill enjoyed just before the recess was over the efforts of Republican leaders to disavow complete parentage of the Ruml pay-as-you-go income tax program. They wanted it clearly understood that Democrats helped produce the baby.

A few months ago, astute, popular Representative Joe Martin of Massachusetts, House G. O. P. leader, was all out for the Ruml plan. However, now that it has become law and the cold facts about tax forgiveness for big incomes have sunk home, Martin and his lieutenants have not been so enthusiastic.

Representative Wright Patman of Texas smoked his G. O. P. colleagues out on this delicate subject a few days before the recess, declaring: "There is one bill that passed the Congress a while back that is strictly, solely and purely a Republican bill—the tax bill. The Republicans wrote that bill and I am willing to give them the credit."

"The gentleman knows that is not a correct statement," countered Martin.

"I am sure the gentleman would like to put the monkey on somebody else's back," shot back Patman.

"One part of the tax bill that the people will object to rather strenuously is the proposal by the Treasury Department—the withholding part of the bill," insisted Martin. "That was supported by Democrats."

"You had to have the withholding tax to pay what you were forgiving the war millionaires," rejoined Patman smoothly. "Under the bill we forgave the millionaires seven or eight billion dollars, and you had to put over the 20 per cent withholding tax in order to pay that."

Representative Bertrand Gearhart of California, the only Republican member of the Ways and Means Committee who fought the Ruml plan, remarked to a friend on the G. O. P. side of the aisle: "It looks like the chickens are coming home to roost."

Rationing Merry-Go-Round

Chairman of the consumer price committee on the Ridgefield (Conn.) Rationing Board is Geraldine Farrar, famous opera singer. . . . In Malden, Mass., a young woman telephoned to the ration board chairman and said "My boy friend and I plan to be married in the fall, and what I want to know is how we can keep warm in our new apartment" . . . As a long line formed in the offices of the Belmont (Mass.) Rationing Board a good-natured citizen asked if there was any place where he could plug in his electric razor to shave himself while waiting . . . Three retired millionaires run the rationing board in Newport, R. I., paying the rent for the board's headquarters and working from 8 a. m. to 6 p. m. They report that John Q. Public gives them no trouble but "most of the headaches are caused by arrogant wives of Navy officers."

Rudolph Halley, counsel for the special Senate committee to investigate gasoline and fuel oil, wrote a hot report recommending that OPA be shorn of power over rationing.

Credit Sales Drop 23% in Biggest Buying Year

American shoppers bought more goods last year than ever before, but fewer of them said "charge it" and fewer still arranged to pay on "time."

Reporting that the $15,100,000,000 in retail credit sales during 1942 represented a 22 per cent decline from the previous year, the Federal Reserve Board's monthly bulletin released yesterday termed the year's most striking retail trend "the very considerable increase in cash sales."

Instalments Curbed

One factor may have been the regulations imposed by the board in May, 1942, on installment and credit buying. These rules require a one-third down payment on most articles, and shorten the time in which the balance may be paid. Regulations governing charge accounts require that payment be made within a specified time.

Total retail sales in 1942 were estimated at $56,200,000,000, a gain of 4 per cent over the previous year and 23 per cent over 1940. Of the 1942 total, however, $41,100,000,000—or 73 per cent—represented cash purchases as against only 64 per cent of the 1941 and 1940 totals of $54,200,000,000 and $45,800,000,000, respectively.

Charge Accounts Off

Charge account purchases accounted for 22 per cent of the 1942 total, off 1 per cent, while installment buying fell from 13 per cent in 1941 and 1940 to only 5 per cent last year.

Installment sales were off in every trade line except women's specialty stores, where they increased 20 per cent, the board reported. Cash sales, on the other hand, were up in every category except automobiles, and were led by a 63 per cent gain in jewelry and 48 per cent in furniture.

Total sales increased in all lines except automobiles, auto accessories and tires, furniture, household appliances, and heating and plumbing equipment. Increases in the other lines ranged from 27 per cent for milk and shoes to 7 per cent for hardware.

"Dad, I learned that too, in the service..."

"Quiet Sergeant, till I show off what I know. That acid comes from ordinary combustion, but when the car was run often and got plenty warm the acid petered out—not causing rank corrosion the way it does with the engine mostly resting. But knowing as I did that chromium-plating won't corrode easy, I could see it would check corrosion to give the engine's insides OIL-PLATING.

"A synthetic in Conoco Nth oil acts sort of like 'magnetism'...to keep OIL-PLATING fastened to inside engine surfaces—not all draining down to the crankcase even standing still. The car ran sweet bringing you back home, didn't it? Too bad some folks have got to wait months for new models, when they should've used Conoco Nth to OIL-PLATE and save their car. Let's go."

U. S. Indicts Shipyard Firm For Fraud

By the Associated Press

New York, July 1.—A Federal grand jury in Brooklyn has indicted the Sullivan Dry Dock and Repair Corp. of Brooklyn and five officers and employes on charges of fraud and submitting false claims in construction and repair of vessels for the Navy and Maritime Commission, Attorney General Biddle announced today.

At the same time, Biddle said United States Attorney Harold M. Kennedy filed a civil suit to recover penalties and double the amount of overcharges alleged in the indictment. Kennedy did not enlarge on the Attorney General's statement.

Named in the indictment, Biddle said, were Anthony J. McAllister, Herbert Krauss and William Watson, each a vice president and director of the company; Walter Krauss, treasurer and director of the company, and Leslie H. Finlay, an administrative employe. The company declined comment.

No Accurate Estimate

The indictment, in five counts, followed an investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Biddle said. He added that there was no accurate estimate of alleged overcharges, but that the FBI investigation indicated more than $100,000 was involved.

The company's shipyard and dry dock in Tebo Basin, Brooklyn, has been building PC boats (subchasers) for the Navy and altering, repairing and converting ships for the Army, Navy and Maritime Commission on negotiated contracts and the cost-plus system.

Biddle said the indictment charged a conspiracy in which Walter Krauss, Watson and McAllister allegedly voted "large and excessive salaries and bonuses and other compensation" to Herbert Krauss, Watson and Finlay and to others who were named as co-conspirators, but not indicted.

Specific Allegations

The Attorney General said it was alleged that "part or all" of this money was "kicked-back" to McAllister and Walter Krauss.

The indictment further charged, Biddle said, that the individual defendants and others filed fraudulent expense accounts and then paid back some or all of the money to McAllister and Walter Krauss, and that they incorporated false and fraudulent salaries, bonuses, expenses and other compensations in billings, vouchers, invoices and claims which were submitted to the Navy and War Shipping Administration for payment.

The Government alleged that salaries of $75,000 were voted to Herbert Krauss, Finlay and Watson, and that a large part of this money was "kicked-back" to McAllister and Walter Krauss.

The maximum penalty for four of the counts is 10 years in prison and $10,000 fine each, while the maximum penalty for the fifth count is 2 years and a $10,000 fine.

U. S. Grand Jury Indicts 13 in Lynching Case

The Justice Department last night announced that a Federal grand jury in East St. Louis, Ill., has indicted 13 persons with conspiracy in the lynching of a Negro last October.

The Negro was James Edward Person, an honorably discharged soldier of the present war. A former sheriff and three former deputy sheriffs and three former deputy sheriffs of Vigo County, Ind., were among the 13 indicted.

According to the indictment the defendants circulated false rumors concerning Person, who was "peaceably making his way" through Vigo County. It was charged that they persuaded a mob to organize and hunt him down. More than a month later his bullet-ridden body was discovered and the American Legion Post at Jackson, Tenn., urged the Justice Department to investigate.

Truman Body to Continue Plane Output Probe Till War's End

By Edward Ryan
Post Staff Writer

Senator Truman (Democrat) of Missouri said yesterday that his committee plans to go ahead investigating aircraft production on a continuous basis until the war ends.

At the same time, Senator Wallgren (Democrat) of Washington, chairman of the Truman Subcommittee which has conducted the aircraft probe, said that "undoubtedly" the Justice Department would act on the committee's report and hearings about faulty inspections at the Wright Aeronautical Corp. aircraft engine factory at Lockland, Ohio.

The committee charged last week that inspection practices at the Lockland plant of the Wright company, wholly owned by Curtiss-Wright Corp., had led to production and Government acceptance of "defective and substandard" material.

The company denied that defective material had been deliberately sold to the Government. Undersecretary of War Patterson said "vigorous" remedies for the inspection system were applied by the Army more than three months ago, and that the results of the Lockland situation had been much less sensational than published inferences based on the Truman report.

Senator Wallgren said that Patterson's statement on the Truman report "was not based on the evidence the committee has taken and which he should have read."

He said that his committee had "bent over backwards" to be mild, and in some instances had "pulled its punches."

Senator Burton (Republican) of Ohio, another member of the Truman Committee, said that "we can stand on our report without any question at all."

Referring to the committee's charge that Army officers sought to impede the Truman investigation, Burton said that the committee had been "disturbed" at the attitude of some of the officers. That situation, said Burton, was "pretty serious."

Rooseevelt Signs Bill Permitting Burial in Temple

District bills to permit burials in the Scottish Rite Temple on Sixteenth Street Northwest and to allow $25,000 from the local blackout fund to be used for civilian war services were signed yesterday by President Roosevelt.

The blackout fund authorization was voted following refusal of local officials to allow such moneys to be used for other than protective services, and the President's signature of it freeing $25,000 for other purposes follows by one day his signing of a bill discontinuing civilian war services nationally.

The other bill allowing not more than two burials to be made in the Scottish Rite Temple was drafted after John H. Cowles expressed a wish to be buried there. Mr. Cowles is the Grand Commander Supreme Council, thirty-third degree, Southern Jurisdictoin, A. A. S. R. of Freemasonry and was instrumental in building of the temple.

Mrs. Milton arrived here early today. The Miltons were married in 1925 and are the parents of two daughters, Abby, 15, and Marilyn, 12.

Warm weather thirst quenchers

When that old, red mercury starts climbing toward the top of the thermometer, be ready with thirst quenchers that will buoy up your spirits! Simple to plan, simpler to make. Casual coolers . . . special occasion beverages . . . nourishing milk drinks that serve as part of a meal—any one of them will prove to be a welcome pickup when energy seems to be at low ebb. Don't let Mr. Mercury catch you unprepared!

SUGAR SYRUPS—One of the first requisites of cool beverages is the sweetening that can be added instantly. It stretches the sugar supply, too, because it blends with the drink completely. Have some on hand. Combine 1 cup sugar with 2 cups water, stir until dissolved, then boil rapidly for 10 minutes. Cool and store covered in the refrigerator until needed.

FRUIT ADES—Oranges, lemons and grapefruit are tops among thirst quencher ingredients. But don't forget other fresh fruit, too. Press the juice from ripe plums, peaches, apricots, nectarines or berries by forcing the fruits through a food press or coarse sieve. Mix the juice with water . . . or for that added sparkle, mix it with plain carbonated water. Add sugar syrup to taste, and serve frosty cold.

MILK SHAKES—HOME STYLE—When a light snack is in order, serve it in the form of a nourishing milk drink. Mix chilled milk with sugar syrup and flavoring, or with molasses, honey or corn syrup. A dash of plain carbonated water will give it that "ice cream soda fizz," and a bit of nutmeg dashed on top will add just enough spice.

CARAMEL EGGNOG SODA—Make a sugar syrup using brown sugar instead of white. Sweeten chilled milk to taste and beat in a well-beaten egg. Again, carbonated water can be used for the bubbly feature. Serve with thin sandwiches or cookies for a light lunch or midafternoon refreshment.

FRUIT SYRUPS—Don't forget to save all the syrups from canned fruits. They are grand mixed with lemon or orangeade or for that fruity flavor in milk drinks.

TOMATO LEMON PUNCH—Fresh tomato juice, pressed from ripe tomatoes and enlivened with a bit of lemon juice makes one of the most ideal thirst quenchers for the hottest days. Add just a bit of sugar syrup, a dash of clove and stretch with carbonated water. Serve cold as ice. It's something to rave about.

Five Rejections

Five times the Senate had rejected the House rider but accepted in the end a so-called conference compromise releasing the three in mid-November if their names are not sent to the Senate and confirmed.

The President told his press conference there had been no suggestion that Dodd, Watson and Lovett had not performed their duties loyally and efficiently. He said they had been singled out for the legislative ouster because of political opinions attributed to them.

Bill of Attainder?

By inference he suggested that the rider was a bill of attainder. He said the Supreme Court itself had defined a bill of attainder as a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial. In this instance, he stressed, there had been neither a judicial trial nor impeachment. He said the Constitution clearly provides for removal of officials by impeachment.

Summing up, he termed the rider an unwarranted encroachment on the authority of both the judicial and executive branches of government, and said that in his opinion it was not binding upon them.

Speculation Shut Off

A reporter asked if that meant the three officials will be kept at their posts. The President said he had no further comment to make at this time. Another newsman asked if he intended to submit their names to the Senate for confirmation. Again the President withheld comment.

Presumably, the Treasury would order their pay cut off on November 15 if they are not meanwhile appointed and confirmed, leaving the way open for a suit by the three contesting the constitutionality of the legislative action.

Congressional observers believed there was little likelihood that the House in the two months following its return would reverse its call for their removal.

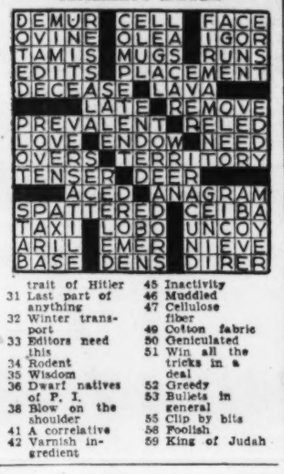
YESTERDAY'S ANSWER.



Spain May Accept French Group

Copyright by Chicago Sun

London, July 13.—Spain is preparing to recognize the French Committee of Liberation in Algiers, it was learned here today. If Gen. Francisco Franco goes through with this act, it will be the most conspicuous gesture yet by Spain against its Fascist friends.

Franco needs trade with French North Africa. Above all, he wants potash and phosphates from there. United States and British representatives are now in Madrid arranging for the allocation of French North African supplies to Spain, and in turn Spain will export manufactured goods to Africa.

Spain needs phosphates so urgently that three ships are loaded and ready to go.

Force stationed in the Middle East rained some 300 tons of high explosives on Reggio Calabria and San Giovanni. Four waves of bombers blanketed the San Giovanni rail yards with explosives and leveled crippling attacks against the ferry slips. Other four-motor monsters smashed at nearby Reggio, turning a large ammunition or fuel dump into a blazing pyre and scoring hits on railroad sidings and ferry installations.

At Messina, Flying Fortreses crippled the railroad arteries leading south by destroying two bridges. Industrial areas and port and ferry installations were pounded heavily by successive waves of Boeing warbirds.

The raid on Reggio Calagria came in the wake of a devastating assault on the same base Sunday night by R. A. F. flown Liberators and Halifax bombers, the latter making their debut in the air war over the Mediterranean The Halifaxes, one of the world's largest bombers, carrying bomb loads far heavier than either Fortresses or Liberators, concentrated on Reggio's airdrome.

Other Liberators and Halifaxes the same night crossed the Messina Strait for heavy attacks on the Vibo Valentia airdrome, on Italy's toe, setting off explosions among hangar and dispersal areas.

12 Allied Planes

From all operations, which included widespread bombing and strafing of bases and communications throughout Sicily, 12 Allied planes failed to return, bringing to 21 the number of Allied aircraft lost in two days. Twenty-one Axis planes were shot down, making a grand total of 79.

Marauders, Mitchells, Bostons, Warhawks and Lightnings roared over Sicily Monday, carrying out attacks on the Axis base at Agrigento, the five-pronged airdrome network at Gerbini, the Milo airfield near Trapani and the harbor at Marsala.

The preceding night Wellingtons, Bostons and Baltimores roamed over Sicily and Italy, pounding Marsala, Mazara Del Vallo, Cancicanti, Borizzo, Rovella and Monte Corvini.

Hundreds of fighters and fighter-bombers, carrying out train-busting missions throughout Sicily, engaged in bitter fights with Axis air formations ranging from 20 to 50 fighters. Ten locomotives and 240 trucks were smashed, one Lightning formation alone destroying 15 gun-carrying trucks from a column of 40 trucks. Other Lightnings smashed 35 out of 115 vehicles on Sicilian roads.

Fighters from Malta alone shot down 34 planes, probably destroyed 11, and damaged 22 in sweeps over the last 24 hours.

TAXES BEAT THE AXIS:

In 1942, Capital Transit Company set aside $4,312,100 for taxes, 2½ times that set aside in 1941, and more than 6¾ times the $649,290 paid in taxes in 1936. Our Accounting Department maintains a fair-sized staff that devotes a good part of its time to figuring how much we have to pay on more than 18 different kinds of taxes.

Taxes beat the Axis and it is pleasant to know that we are financially able to carry our share of the tax burden, contribute to the District's services to its citizens and carry our just share of the country's heavy war debt. What we pay is only a drop in the bucket but the bucket is being swung at Hitler, Musso and Hirohito and that suits us. Yes sir, 17.7% of our total 1942 Operating Revenues went for taxes, but Capital Transit doesn't mind paying one bit its patriotically fair share.

Depreciation of equipment and property also took 8.8 cents out of every one of last year's revenue dollars. $2,145,172 was set aside for that purpose in 1942 as compared to $1,015,533 in 1936.

War has made it almost impossible to obtain delivery of necessary parts and replacements and while we have ingeniously devised and invented, our equipment literally has been taking a heavy beating.

50 YEARS on "The Avenue"

And Ready for the Fifty Years Ahead!

Back in 1893 when the Kann brothers opened their store in Washington your great grandmothers flocked to its counters to buy the piece goods it offered for sale. Indeed, it was soon named, "The Busy Corner," a name that's still seen on that corner today.

And in those gay and leisurely "horse-and-buggy" days, The Avenue was Washington's "Main Street," and Kann's was (and is) at the center of its famous mile! Confidence and friendliness, two great underlying principles of progress, were there guiding "The Busy Corner" then, as now. Of all the business houses on the Avenue which catered to the whims and needs of Washington in the "Gay Nineties" only Kann's remains in its original location . . . Only one or two still exist.

Time marches on! Today as alert merchants we face with you a wartime era of shortages and restrictions. One hundred and four of our employees are in the service of their country. Many others have gone into war plants or wartime government work. It is not only difficult to serve you as well as we'd like, but it is impossible to supply you with all the things you were accustomed to buying at Kann's. Surely these are challenging times for all of us!

But let's look ahead! New materials and new ideas foreshadow tremendous industrial advances in the peacetime world of tomorrow. American ingenuity that is today producing more and better planes, ships, tanks and munitions is your promise of better stoves, refrigerators, radios and washing machines. We face the 50 years ahead with renewed confidence.

Long range American bombers could make an attack on Paramuschiro from Amchitka and return, though the distance is about their extreme range. Attu is well within range, while the Navy reported last week that an auxiliary aircraft carrier was operating in the Aleutians during the conquest of Attu. There has been no indication whether it still is in the North Pacific.

Kiska has been boombed about a dozen times this month ,and bombarded three times by American warpships. Weather has prevented more frequent air attacks, and the ships apparently have partly taken over the job of harassing the isloated Jap base.

Secretary Knox had the following to say on other Navy topics at his press conference yesterday.

While U-boat sinkings in the North Atlantic have been materially reduced, it would be "the worst kind of folly" to assume we have "licked the submarine." He said he "hadn't a doubt but that sinkings will break out again somewhere else."

No American Navy losses have been reported in the Sicily action yet. He was very much pleased with Navy's work in landing the troops on schedule and with the "great show" now being put on by the Army.

The new Navy dive-bomber, the "Hell-diver" is a "good ship" but a number of difficulties have prevented it being put into production.

Igor Gorin Will Sing Tonight at Watergate Concert

Igor Gorin, baritone, who knew how to say only "Hello" and "O. K." when he landed in New York City in 1935, will sing tonight at the Watergate in that tongue with no misgivings.

Although he admits that sometimes when speaking in moments of excitement his "the's" become "de's" and his "through's" "droo's," he says there is a god of artists who watches at performances, and he has never yet missed an accent or a vowel while singing the American music he loves.

His love for American music, he says is shared by America's fighting men who call for "Sylvia" and "The Lord's Prayer," as well as the ballads, which he sings, too. "It is a pleasure beyond description to sing for these boys," he said yesterday. "The pleasure is something to take with you as long as you live—they whistle and cheer and have a wonderful time*" Last night he entertained at Fort Meade.

In singing for these boys, Gorin sings for his own countrymen. He came to New York first as a visitor and was so enthralled by New York's skyscrapers, its tremendousness and its Broadway lights, that he left to return almost immediately through immigration channels. He became a citizen exactly five years to the day of the second landing.

"I thought then that America was the world of today and tomorrow, and when I sing in the Nation's Capital, I feel that I am in the presence of the center of the world," said Gorin.

"When I was younger, I had a one-track mind," he said, "everything of importance to me concerned my art, I thought. But now, I believe that the happenings of today are the most important things that can concern anybody—the rays of hope in the recent news drag me from bed in the morning to turn on the radio," he confessed.

Gorin, born in the Ukraine, but educated in Vienna, has an artist sister, last heard from in Paris before the war, and a brother who was then living in Poland.

But his wife, formerly Mary Smith, is an Ohioan, born like himself, of prosperous farming parents.

Three years ago they met in Hollywood. "She was going to Alaska to hunt grizzly bears," he said, "but found me instead—a baritone."

Drivers Ignore 'Flashing Red' Traffic Signals

District traffic authorities last night disclosed that motorists are disregarding "flashing red stop lights" at 14 major intersections and issued a warning that regulations require vehicles to come to a full stop at the signals.

As a substitute for stop signs, which are virtually unobtainable because they are made of metal, the lights were placed in operation Monday. A survey showed that car drivers failed to stop at the lights, apparently thinking they were just out of order.

It was pointed out that the "flashing red" under a new regulaion is to be considered the same as a "stop sign."

Police said that no arrests will be made until next Monday, allowing motorists a week of grace to become familiar with the new signals.

Let's Win the War, President's Slogan

A reporter asked President Roosevelt yesterday if, in his remarks at the dinner to General Henri Giraud early last week, he meant that Germany must be eliminated in the postwar world as well as from the war.

The President replied he was no Delphic oracle and did not know. Let's win the war, isn't that a good slogan, he added.

In Washington, Wilbur LaRoe, chairman of the committee on civic affairs, Washington Federation of Churches, had this to say about the liquor situation:

"The bad liquor situation in Washington is due mainly to a very loose liquor law which permits sale in almost any drug store or grocery store, in contrast to the carefully policed situation in States like Pennsylvania, where the State maintains under its own control a very limited number of liquor stores.

"The situation here will never be improved without a radical change in the liquor law."

Who are non-essential travelers?

Recent surveys of travelers using Santa Fe trains indicate that a large majority are on essential trips, and this group is growing daily. Trains are running to capacity, and it is impossible to get more equipment to handle the steadily increasing load.

This means less room for non-essential travelers. But who are non-essential travelers?

YOU ARE THE JUDGE

You are the judge of whether or not your trip is essential—and your judgment is what our government is relying upon.

Please consider these points when you think of traveling on the railroads this summer and for the duration:

1. Your trip may take a Pullman berth or chair car seat needed by men in uniform traveling under orders.
2. Your trip may delay war workers, not in uniform, in reaching their vital jobs.
3. Your trip may deprive men and women in the service of a furlough trip to visit their homefolks.

If you do take a trip, plan for it in advance, travel light, consider taking a box lunch to avoid delayed meals in the diners, and make up your mind to put up with certain inconveniences and crowded conditions.

WHAT ABOUT VACATION TRAVEL?

Vacations should be spread out over the year, not confined to summer months.

A vacation trip should be confined to one round trip only, starting and returning on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday.

Travel in chair cars whenever possible, and please carry only one piece of luggage.

Consult your ticket agent about your travel plans. You'll find his friendly advice helpful.

You are his unknown Angel of Mercy, but without you . . . and thousands more blood donors . . . this merciful, healing life stream cannot be maintained. The need is so great. Allies Advance

With the capture of Augusta by the British Eighth Army, the Allies have acquired one of Sicily's finest ports, indeed, one of the finest natural harbors in the Mediterranean. Augusta was for a long time one of the principal bases of the Italian fleet. In the meantime another British force has succeeded in making a landing on the Sicilian coast in the vicinity of the great Axis air base at Catania, and British, Canadian and American troops have established a junction at Ragusa and Palazzola.

The strategy of the Allies is apparently to strengthen and expand their grip on the southeastern third of the island. At the same time they intend to drive north in the general direction of Messina, the capture of which would cut off the Axis forces in central and western Sicily from direct access, via the Messina-San Giovanni train ferry, to the Italian peninsula. These enemy forces could then be disposed of at leisure. However, since the bulk of enemy strength does not yet appear to have been thrown into the fray, we cannot afford to assume that the drive to Messina will be easy. Hard fighting must be expected.

Nonetheless, Allied progress in Sicily has been, on the whole, so efficient and so swift that the island's early capture is a possibility if not a probability. Certainly now that adequate port facilities are available to the Allies at Licata, Syracuse and Augusta, the problem of reinforcing and supplying our troops in Sicily will be enormously simplified. So we may soon, if we do not already, enjoy numerical superiority over the enemy on land and in the air. The prospect is most encouraging.

Word In Time

Some weeks ago The Post called attention to a survey of changes in farm land values made by the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago. Inquiries addressed to bankers in the Midwestern agricultural States comprising the Seventh Federal Reserve District showed that land values were much higher than a year ago. Moreover, bankers familiar with conditions in local farming areas were of the opinion that current values were higher than they should be on the basis of the land's long-time earning power. That means, of course, that some purchasers of farm land at current prices will find themselves saddled with property yielding inadequate returns on their investment. Worse still, if the land has been bought with borrowed funds, interest on the indebtedness incurred may become too heavy to carry in the event of declines in agricultural prices, with the result that mortgages will be foreclosed, and farmers dispossessed.

Remembering the unhappy series of events that followed the collapse of the land boom of World War I, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics has now issued a warning to the effect that the rise in farm land values will bear watching. Farmers are being reminded that it is wise to use their greatly increased incomes to pay off mortgage indebtedness and that substantial down payments on land acquired provide a guarantee against future trouble. So far the traffic in farm lands appears to be less of a speculation and more of an investment than at the time of the last war. But it is none too soon to call attention to the potential dangers of the current trend.

Air Mail

Wartime needs have placed a heavy burden on the country's commercial airlines. They cannot begin to meet the demands for passenger transportation. And they are called upon to carry an unprecedented volume of air mail and express. Yet, because the armed services properly have first call upon the output of our aircraft factories, the commercial aviation companies are able to maintain only a total of 166 planes in service—scarcely more than half the number they had in operation before our entry into the war.

In consequence, passenger travel on the airlines has been put on a priority basis. Persons traveling on war missions properly take precedence over ordinary civilians. But no such priority system has yet been established for mail which may also be moving on vital wartime business. Speedy delivery of letters may save personal trips. Yet all too frequently these days, because passenger loads are so great, mail sacks are left behind in airports and subjected to serious delay.

In part, this air-mail congestion is directly due to the fact that all communications bearing air mail postage are treated alike regardless of urgency or importance. It should be feasible to establish priorities for the use of air-mail which would wholly deny the privilege to advertising material, circular letters and the like, reserving it for genuinely war-related messages. Once this is done, the transport of air-mail can be brought into sensible balance with passenger travel. In Canada, first-class air mail takes precedence over all other forms of traffic.

Even if every effort is made to reduce non-essential airline traffic, the commercial air carriers are likely to be grossly overburdened. Theirs is a vitally significant service in wartime. Now that our aircraft production is really in stride, it may be possible, and desirable, to augment their meager fleets of planes.

Trump Card

By far the brightest spot in the current war news is the record of the war on the U-boat. That that war has already been won shines through the latest communique. In June, according to a joint statement issued by the British and American governments, Allied ship losses were the lowest in 19 months. This good news is the climax of a series of reports showing that the sea wolves had first been thrown on the defense and then were being progressively discomfited.

Figures are still wrapped in secrecy. It was Premier Churchill who in his May 19 address to Congress lifted the veil to reveal the first inkling of real progress in the Battle of the Atlantic. Up till then many weary months had elapsed during which we were paying a fearful price in men and materiel for our lack of foresight and our traditional naval thinking. "Our killings of the U-boat," said the British Prime Minister, "have this year greatly exceeded all previous experience. The last three months, and particularly the last three weeks, have yielded record results." Mr. Churchill has a habit of scooping the American authorities on the facts about the war on the U-boat—a practice that, presumably, will now be stopped by the agreement to issue a joint Anglo-American statement on the tenth of every month. On this occasion there was a fear in Washington that the Prime Minister had been somewhat rash. Our officials preferred to keep their fingers crossed and their lips sealed till time had established what Wall Streeters call a trend. This has since been forthcoming. All through May our ship losses continued to go down and U-boat losses to go up. It is said that in that month as many as a U-boat a day out of a total of about a hundred at large and 400 all told was being consigned to Davy Jones's locker. What happened to the U-boats in June is not disclosed. Judging from the communiques, the killings were not so heavy, but that was due to a circumstance more heartening even than the maintenance of the high casualty list—the U-boat had become so scarce on convoy routes that the hunt for them had been transferred to Axis home waters.

This is what makes the latest communique so dramatic. Early this year the Berlin radio spoke about Nazi determination at last to use her "trump card," meaning her U-boats. This was to be directed at overwhelming our shipping "with ever-increasing energy." But the latest reports indicate that the Nazi trump wasn't high enough to win this crucial joust in the stormy waters of the Atlantic. That the U-boat has slunk home to lick his wounds is an ignominious anticlimax to the beginning-of-the-year boastfulness.

Of course, it may be that, since Hitler has been thrust on the defensive, he has recalled his wolf packs to guard the invasion coasts. But in this case retreat is defeat. For the only hope that the Nazi high command would stave off the inevitable disaster lay in nicking, if not cutting, the jugular vein which our shipping established between the battlefields of Europe and the reservoir of manpower and the arsenal of arms in the New World. That was Hitler's best defense. For by their retreat the U-boats are allowing the argosies to flow to Europe in a volume and at a rate which sooner now than later will destroy the evil scourge of Hitlerism. Thus the conclusion is inescapable that the retreat of the sea wolves has been enforced.

What accounts for the sound drubbing which has been administered to the U-boat? Probably a combination of circumstances. The human factor is important. Our sea-fighters have gained in experience, there is more cooperation between the British and the Americans, and the sea and air arm have been welded together in perfect teamwork. In the weapons employed against the U-boat the excellent job done by our long-range bombers and by the small aircraft carriers which now accompany our convoys have rendered an inestimable service. Nor should we forget the destruction that must have been wrought by British and American bombardment of the submarine bases and construction sites in Germany and occupied Europe. Doubtless the bombings have prevented the Nazis from replacing their losses. Two months ago Vice Admiral Percy Nolles, Chief of the Canadian Naval Staff, said that the "net gain is something more than 10 a month," but it looks as if the bombers have helped to erase replacement altogether. We wonder, however, whether this gives the complete picture. The collapse of the U-boat has been so rapid that the thought persists that some new device has been pressed into effective service.

Be that as it may, the question is not as important as the result. The "beginning of the end" which the President said was marked by the dazzling invasion of Sicily may really have been the worsting of Hitler's seagoing marauders. The trump card has been played. It is the last card, as it was in the last war, when Bethmann-Hollweg applied the phrase to the U-boat as it embarked upon unrestricted warfare at sea.

Judicial Trial

The President was wholly justified in his denunciation yesterday of the Kerr amendment forbidding the payment of salaries to Messrs. Watson, Dodd and Lovett. That he felt obliged to sign the urgent deficiency appropriation bill is understandable enough in view of the need to meet payroll obligations long past due. It is regrettable, nevertheless, that the President's name should appear upon a measure so flagrantly violative of the Constitution. Here is fresh illustration of the evil involved in the attachment of wholly irrelevant riders to essential legislative acts. The Executive has, in effect, been robbed of his veto power.

The courts must now be looked to for protection of the three proscribed individuals. Only in the courts, moreover, can the constitutionality of the procedure laid down by Congress be determined. The Post believes, therefore, that the President should not make himself a party to this procedure. If he were to nominate these men for appointment to offices they already legally hold, and submit their names to the Senate for confirmation, he would be giving at least the appearance of approval to this course. The precedent would be, in our opinion, a very dangerous one.

The constitutional issues raised by the original Kerr amendment have not been changed one iota by the disingenuous compromise on which House and Senate finally agreed. If it was invalid for Congress to remove Watson, Dodd and Lovett from office in July, it will be no less invalid in Nevomber. The action will remain in punishment of individuals without judicial trial. As Congressman Hobbs observed, "The granting to the sentenced trio of the possibility of another hearing before a Senate committee falls just as short of giving them a trial in court as did the hearings held by the Dies and Kerr committees of the House . . . Multiplying the number of nonjudicial trials is as absurd as trying to make three—or a dozen—wrongs constitute a right."

The legislative invasion of the province of executive authority, to which we objected in the original Kerr amendment, is in no way remedied by requiring the President to submit the appointments of specified individuals for senatorial confirmation. Congress may, of course, provide for senatorial confirmation of any, or all, positions in the executive branch of the Government. But the Kerr amendment, even in its modified form, amounts simply to a devious removal of specifically named persons whose appointments were made in entire accordance with the law as laid down by Congress itself. As Mr. Roosevelt pointed out, it is clearly violative of the tripartite division of powers established by the Constitution.

The issues at stake are vital ones. They involve not only the civil rights of the individuals concerned but also the essential balance between legislative and executive authority. It seems to us incontrovertible that the spirit of the Constitution has been assailed. We believe that the third branch of our Government, the judiciary, should decide whether the course Congress has chosen does not also violate the letter of the Constitution.

Tiger By The Tail

After nine days, during which they have suffered terrific losses in manpower, tanks and planes, the German forces in the Orel-Kursk-Belgorod Front find themselves just about where they began at the outset of their current offensive. It is now apparent that Hitler had hoped to break the Russian lines through sheer weight of numbers and metal. According to all accounts, the concentration of German tanks on this front was beyond anything ever seen in so restricted a sector. That does not appear to have helped the Nazis, however. The Russian lines have held.

This is a fact of tremendous importance. The very circumstance that the Germans were this year far less ambitious in their offensive plans then they were in 1941 and 1942 was indicative of their declining strength. But, relatively modest as their objectives may have been this time, they appear to have encountered formidable obstacles. The minor gains made in the Belgorod area are altogether out of proportion to German losses. Yet Hitler cannot afford to call off the offensive. This would be a fatal confession of weakness. Besides, it might give the Russians the opportunity they seek to take the offensive themselves. So the Nazis are caught in a web of their own spinning. At a time when the Axis is receiving punishing blows in the Mediterranean, Hitler finds he has a tiger by the tail on the Eastern Front. He cannot afford to hold on. But he also cannot afford to let go.

Sicilian Invasion

By Mark Sullivan

Strains Home Front

FOR AMERICA, Sicily is the beginning of war in earnest—it now enters the stage of continuous drive against continuous resistance. And war in earnest means the home front as well as the military.

To grasp the added strains we at home must bend our backs to, take as an illustration one simple equation. Distance equals oil. Every mile our troops advance toward the final clash means an added mile over which men and supplies must be transported—and transportation means oil. This applies to both the European and the Pacific fronts. And as the fighting grows in intensity, so must the transport of men and materials grow in quantity.

Distance is, in this war, America's great handicap. In the fighting in Sicily, where the Axis needs to move men and supplies only a few miles, or at most only a few hundred, we must move them thousands. On the Pacific front, the disadvantage against us is much the same. Distance is our great handicap — and the overcoming of distance means oil. Furthermore, in this war airplanes play an increasing role, will be more and more used by us. And air war means gas.

IN PROPORTION, as more oil and gas are necessary for war, so must we at home do with less. The deprivation of gas we have so far endured will become more severe. Whoever can arrange for a substitute for fuel next winter had best be quick about it. We must organize with the highest efficiency the distribution of the limited quantity we can have. And to emphasize oil and gas is merely to illustrate our situation as a whole. In practically every area of our civilian life, and notably food, we must economize to the bone and organize the best possible system for making what we have stretch the farthest. If the organizing appeals to the country are well done, the country will the more cheerfully endure exactions and burdens.

This brings us to the recent recurrence of talk about a war cabinet. This is proposed, not for the conduct of the war, about which there is general satisfaction, but for the better organizing of the home front. The need arises from the sum of several reasons. One is that decision should be made by some central group; and that this group, before coming to decision, should have taken into account the effect the decision will have on all aspects of the home front.

When Mr. Chester C. Davis was Food Administrator, he read in newspapers an announcement of a step taken by another official—a step which made Mr. Davis' own program about food difficult if not impossible. As another example, the War Labor Board directed that Mr. John L. Lewis sign a contract with the coal operators. Subsequently President Roosevelt, at a press conference, declared that he has no power to make Mr. Lewis sign a contract. Obviously if the Administration has no such authority, the War Labor Board ought not to have issued its direction. And obviously all this should have been threshed out in advance, by some over-all authority, such as a war cabinet would be.

ANOTHER REASON for a war cabinet is that everybody should be able to know where authority rests. A common feeling in Washington is that decisions are made or influenced, or policies suggested, by persons who do not have formal authority or responsibility in the fields in which they exercise influence. Before the Senate Committee on Agriculture, a representative of cattle raisers, complaining of muddle about meat, declared: "Surrounding the President are a group of people who have no responsibility, yet determine policy and cause confusion." This is the complaint of an aggrieved person—but much of Washington says much the same.

If the defect on our home front is nothing more than mere looseness of organization, mere clashes of authority or personality, mere lack of defined jurisdictions, it is imperative that we by some means achieve a compactness of authority comparable to the degree of sacrifice by the people which such authority must ask. It is imperative, not merely for the sake of those who sacrifice on the home front, but in order that soldiers on the battle front be adequately and promptly supplied. When an observer the other day, appalled by what he saw in Washington, said, "This just must not go on," the deep concern that beset him was a concern about winning the war.

Y. W. C. A.

At the present time most of us are giving words of gratitude to the American Red Cross, the U. S. O. and various other organizations but little has been said about the Y. W. C. A.

This association has a history of service and helpfulness. It has helped many problems of thousands of people. Their staff of professionals and volunteers, equipped to meet every need, have made many people happier than they would have been had it not been for the Y. W. C. A.

Round Three

LATE THOUGH it is in the year, the Russian Front has blazed into action. It appears to be action initiated by the Germans after long preparation—met by the Russians after equal preparation.

As to why the Germans should attack, and what they hope to gain, the answer is probably quite simple. The Russian Front is the only front on which they can take the initiative this year—they lack the sea power and the air power to carry the war to us either on the British Isles front on the Mediterranean Front, and apart from that they may reckon that the defensive is the stronger position on these two fronts, thus making a virtue out of necessity.

As to the Russian Front, the Germans have very large armies there—the estimates that reach us number their strength at more than two hundred divisions, backed by a considerable percentage of the German air force.

If the German-Russian Front armies remain passive, they start to decay. On the defensive, they not only come no closer to victory—they invite Russian attack, which, should it succeed, means German defeat.

TO BE sure, two offensive campaigns against Russia have failed to reach their ultimate objectives. But they have weakened Russia nevertheless—perhaps more than they have weakened Germany. Having drawn the balance, the Germans now invite a third test, still confident that Russian exhaustion and collapse will come before German exhaustion and collapse.

As to the stakes, they are life-and-death stakes. For Germany, everything is at stake. To knock Russia out of the war is perhaps the only way in which the Axis can recover its dominant position. A victory over Russia would free tremendous German and Japanese troop masses, and would alter the equation in the ground fighting in other theaters altogether in the Axis favor. The aerial equation would be similarly influenced—this is the only way in which Germany can get the major reinforcement of planes and pilots needed in the western European theaters. In the matter of supplies, of prestige, of home-front morale . . . in every way this victory, if it could be achieved, would be such a lift that it has become more than desirable, more than a hope—it becomes the only way out. The alternatives are so black that Round Three against Russia, for all its difficulties, is a "must"—worth all the fighting, all the effort, all the gamble.

As to the nature of the fighting, it appears from the outset to be different from that of any previous Russian Front campaign. The Russian war began, over two years ago, as war of movement—very open, with mobile units of German advance covering huge distances, being met by loose defensive formations of the Russian armies and by citizens fighting as guerillas, using fortified villages as strong-points. As the Russians learned to fortify villages and cities, the "hedgehog" defense sprang up.

THE STRENGTH of the original advance was the tank and dive-bomber break-through, followed by the infantry "rolling up" process to either side of the break-through spearhead. The strength of the Russian defense lay in antitank weapons and tactics, and in anti-dive-bomber weapons and tactics. The Russians used mine-fields, road-blocks, a variety of antitank guns, mortars, hand grenades, Molotov cocktails, slit trenches — and, above all, they used the hedgehog, the complex of interrelated strong points which channeled the mobile advance into lanes where it could be brought under intensive gunfire.

By the time of Stalingrad, the Russia defense had become so strong as to force the Germans to a complete change in their attack method. The German goal was still the break-through—that is always the general's dream. But the break-through could no longer be effected by slashing mobile attack. It meant a slow, bludgeoning pounding with heavy artillery, heavy bombers, heavy tanks, with infantry assault on pill-box after pill-box, bunker after bunker—the laborious effort to crush an entire hedgehog complex.

The Battle of Stalingrad was such an effort—an effort which failed.

This is warfare which has become a "20 years after" version of the frontal warfare of 1918, with greater and greater troop masses drawn up in opposition to each other.

As they resume the offensive, the Germans can have no illusions about the task. The fact that they resume it is evidence that they believe they have perfected a break-through method which, whatever the cost, will crush the deep Russian defense. Should they be right, we shall all be affected, for the war will become much harder. Soldiers, everywhere, watch the Russian Front with intense interest.

"Scolding The Press"

Except on the basis that it is human to err, it is difficult to accept your reasoning regarding the criticism of the President in your editorial, "Scolding the Press."

It is all very well for the press to have a good opinion of itself and its zeal in pressing for certain ideas is manifest. But zeal is not a sufficient covering for logic. In this, the press must bear its full share of responsibility in order to live up to its highest opportunities.

One point for you to consider. For the past 10 years the majority of the press has opposed the main policies which ran contrary to the economy of the 1920s. As the keystone of democracy is the "greatest good to the greatest number," it is plain that the press has lagged in its estimate of what the people believe is for their greatest good. Yet it is absurd to hold that the press is unpatriotic even though it is patently misguided.

Conscripting Pigeons

While meat is so scarce that it is being scantily rationed, thousands of tons of the most delectable meat are being wasted when its food value is so badly needed.

One public building here in St. Louis must have at least 200 pigeons and hundreds of other buildings here have sizable flocks. There must be millions of these birds in the whole country which have subsisted on the public bounty for years, only to repay this gratuity by messing up and making unsightly and unsanitary our public buildings.

Not being insect eaters, these birds are of no value in protecting growing crops, but they can be of value in conserving the public's health.

Buses

Because of the infrequency of the Riverside Stadium bus service, which serves principally Navy and Army employes, whose first duty is to report on time, might it not be more logical to run sufficient buses during rush hours and curtail more drastically during nonrush hours? A break of 18 minutes in the running time (as it was this morning) can only result in overcrowding at all bus stops, which leads to pushing and shoving and looseness of tongues in the use of profane language. Labor Unions

I wish to commend the letter of J. B. Beach of July 4 and The Post for printing it. The press and radio are drumming up hatred for unions. This movement is reminiscent of the first stages of the rise of fascism. The fomenting of hatred for unionism was so successful that Congress passed the Smith-Connally bill over the presidential veto in record time. Congress' quick action can be largely attributed to public pressure.

The vicious antilabor sections of the "antistrike" bill were never publicized (e. g., unions are not allowed to contribute to political campaigns). Are capitalists and large corporations to be allowed weapons of democracy denied to labor? Where is the American sense of fair play?

It is therefore evident that the news agencies were successful in deluding the people with their campaign of omission and distortion of the facts as prescribed by the enemies of labor.

Zoot-Suiters

Our Government ought to shut down on this persecution of the zoot-suiters. Such clothing may be foolish as mere style, but at expressing ideas, this is a wretchedly poor way to oppose it. Besides, what reason have we to think that such ideas are wrong, or even erroneous? If nothing worse can be said against them than that they look crazy, that is nothing. If they express the feelings of classes who do not, or who even think they do not, have a fair show, this is no way to meet the situation. Such a way of meeting it is disloyalty to the United States.

The attempts to suppress such ideas by force is wholly wrong. Opposition to the war efforts of the Government is wrong, but if a minority considers itself abused, it has a perfect right to say so, no matter what public sentiment may be. WILLIAM C. LEE.

Mr. Tawes

Maryland OPA today says: "The responsibility for the use of his ration in the official capacity only, as Comptroller of the State of Maryland, rests with Mr. Tawes."

In view of the record, the question arises as to whether OPA isn't placing too much trust in an official who has proven his untrustworthiness.

Gas for 1600 miles a month is a lot of gas and implies a pretty active work week for our comptroller.

The Once Over

Adolf Decides on a New Uniform

"I am putting on the uniform of a soldier, never to take it off until Germany is victorious everywhere."—Hitler in 1939.)

Tailor—Ah, Herr Hitler, what can I do for you?

Hitler—I need some new clothes.

Tailor—I hadn't expected you so soon.

Hitler—That goes for me, too. But it's an uncertain era. Anyhow, this uniform hasn't stood up the way it should Tailor—After all, you've had it ever since 1939. Has it had steady wear?

Hitler—Has it!

* * * *

Tailor—Is this the one you put on when the war broke out and said you would never take off until it ended with victory?

Hitler (sadly)—Ach, yes!

Tailor—Well, there's a limit to the wearing quality of any material. It looks pretty worn everywhere except in the seat. That's as good as new.

Hitler—That's easily explained: I haven't had any chance to sit down in it.

Tailor—Were the pants always as baggy as this?

Hitler—I'm not sure whether they were that loose to begin with or whether I've shrunk.

* * * *

Tailor—Well, you'll feel better in a new uniform. Do you want a coat with a belt in the back?

Hitler—I don't want any belts in the back or front either. I'm getting enough already.

Tailor (as he takes his measure)—Will you want the shoulders padded?

Hitler—No; just pad the seat of the trousers; that's where I may need it most.

* * * *

Tailor—Shall I build up the chest like the last time to give you the effect of added height and strength?

Hitler—No. I'm afraid you overdid it last time.

Hitler—Certainly not!

* * * *

Tailor—You want it to be 100 per cent military?

Hitler—I'm not certain. Could you make me something that would be half military and half civilian?

Tailor—You mean something for a quick change?

Hitler—Not too quick . . . I hope. Something that in certain emergencies could be quickly changed so it would not identify me on sight as a military man.

Tailor—It would always be difficult to hide the fact you are a military man.

Hitler (to himself)—I'm beginning to wonder!

* * * *

Tailor—Well, let us get on. How about the length of the pants?

Hitler—Make them a lot shorter than the old ones.

Hitler—IZZAT SO!

"Bombing Civilians"

In reply to Reader, Silver Spring, Md., on "bombing civilians," in Saturday's Post, would suggest that he read something beside Staats Zeitung and El Osservatore Romano. Did he read of the bombings of Ethiopia, Poland, Greece, Holland, Norway, Belgium and England? I didn't hear his protests, then.

Wars were once fought on battlefields, by opposing armies, but not this war. And this war was not started by Britain and the United States. It was also said, "All they that take the sword shall perish by the sword." Read some more, "Reader."

KENNETH REYNOLDS.
Washington, July 7.

No sooner does the Federal Trade Commission warn certain manufacturers against making false representations in their ads than a new element of half-truth creeps into some of American advertising.

I refer to the comparatively new device of linking up the names of our famous Americans with their products. This, of course, being done in a very subtle way. For example, there is a national tobacco company which tells the story of Daniel Boone trecking thru the wilds of Colonial Kentucky and finally making a settlement. This is a subtle type of advertising which leaves the brand of tobacco and Daniel Boone linked in the minds of many listeners.

A local beer company recently used the name of Thomas Jefferson in their ads. This type of advertising must seem offensive to any person who has any feeling for America at all. It seems a shame that, for example, the name of Thomas Jefferson, Champion, should be connected (even in a small way) with the name of a popular beer.

It will remain a mystery to the writer why American advertisers cannot find less offending ways of publicizing their products than prostituting the names of the great in our national history.

De Gaulle In Syria

By Ernest Lindley

Sought To Create Friction

ONE OF the several reasons for the dissatisfaction of the British government with General de Gaulle, outlined previously in this column, is that he sought to create friction between the British and French in Syria.

LINDLEY

Syria is an important Allied base. It is also important because the relations between the French and the Syrian Moslems have an influence on the attitude of Arabs in other sections of the Middle East toward the Allied cause.

The following outline of British-French relations in Syria comes from an authoritative Washington source:

The De Gaullists and British ousted the Vichy regime from Syria in July, 1941. A prior mutual agreement gave the British responsibility for the military security of Syria, De Gaulle responsibility for internal order and developing Syrian resources. The British recognized interim French political preeminence but proposed that Syria be given independence because: (1) As a Class A mandate Syria was qualified for it; (2) they believed independence would contribute to political stability and, through it, to military security; and (3) independence granted under joint French-British auspices would strengthen Britain's position elsewhere in the world.

Nearly three months passed before the British could induce De Gaulle to make the first move. On September 26 he proclaimed the independence of Syria, limited only by the necessities of war, and subject to juridical confirmation by the League of Nations and of liberated France, for whom he considered himself trustee. As his agent in Syria, De Gaulle named General Catroux, who took the title of Delegate-General. Catroux appointed native Syrians to the presidency and other high offices and they, in turn, named subordinates satisfactory to him.

A PROMISE was made to reinstate the Syrian constitution, suspended just before the outbreak of war in 1939. This would have given the Syrians a chance to elect their own officials. But no election was called, even though the British pressed Catroux for prompt action. Some of Catroux's appointies attempted to function independently, provoking clashes with him.

The rising unrest among the Arabs gave concern to the British. It was partly due to economic difficulties. Sizable British and French armies helped to produce inflation. Prices tripled and quadrupled. Wheat and gold went into hoarding. Bread riots occurred. The British proposed setting up a cereals office to collect the harvest and make bread available at controlled prices. Catroux agreed.

Jurisdictional conflict between the British and French occurred at many points. The British arrested natives on charges of smuggling industrial diamonds through Turkey to the Axis. Catroux said that some of the prisoners were pro-De Gaullists and indicated that the charges were trumped up to purge Syria of them. In July, 1942, De Gaulle visited Syria. The tension was so acute that at one time Washington mediation was necessary to compose what threatened to develop into armed clashes between the British and French.

The Syrian Arabs were enjoying less freedom and suffering greater economic want than before the war. Their plight was advertised, with suitable exaggeration by the Axis radio broadcasts to Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Trans-Jordan, Iraq and Palestine.

THE BRITISH continued pressing De Gaulle to give effect to his political promises to the Arabs. The United States, to uphold the Atlantic Charter and the Declaration of United Nations, gave Britain moral support, and continue to do so.

In March of this year Catroux visited De Gaulle in London and returned to Syria with a mandate to appoint new Arab officials, but also to hold an election. The latter step was due to British pressure.

The severity of French rule in Syria has been modified to some extent, and pressure between the British and French in Syria has eased. This is attributed partly to the influence of some of the longer-headed leaders on the new French National Committee of Liberation, partly to Catroux. Catroux, like De Gaulle, is a French army man, hypersensitive over French national honor and prestige, naturally reluctant to take any step which might be construed as alienating a part of the French Empire. But he is esteemed by the British and ourselves as a skilled mediator, devoted to composing conflicts among the French.

The Syrian elections are set for July 25. The Arab world is awaiting the result. How free the balloting will be remains to be seen. The Syrian constitution sets up a small property-ownership qualification for voting, but imposes no religious or racial test. Manipulation is possible, however.

The Syrians are fairly well advanced politically, due at least partly to the influence of the American University at Beirut, which has educated many native leaders and strengthened Arab cultural progress for 75 years. The Syrians are more advanced than the Arabs of North Africa or of Iraq, over which Britain some time ago renounced its mandate in favor of independence.

'Spank' Plan Not Denied

Roosevelt 'Not Talking'

Reports that the President will publicly spank high officials for bickering, and will make a radio appeal to the Nation for home-front unity persisted last night after the President declined confirmation or denial.

The President laughingly announced that he is going on the air some day between now and January 1 when reporters asked if he is planning any fireside chats.

Earlier, Senator Radcliffe (Democrat) of Maryland said the President "certainly wasn't combative" when he urged him to go on the air on home-front questions to offset any unfavorable impression created by differences among Washington officials.

Specifically, reporters asked the President if he intended to set up a new organization to handle the purchase of strategic and vital materials, thus depriving Vice President Wallace's Bureau of Economic Warfare and Jesse Jones' RFC of their present clashing jurisdiction in this field.

Such a move, tantamount to public disciplining of both Jones and Wallace for their recent bitter personal exchanges, had been reliably predicted.

Mr. Roosevelt told reporters he had no comment to make about the matter.

Senator Radcliffe is one of a number of Democratic Senators and Representatives who are known to have been urging that the President take the war on the home front directly to the country during the two-month congressional recess. Reports persisted at the Capitol yesterday that Mr. Roosevelt will make not one but a series of fireside chats.

Radcliffe told reporters he called at the White House to recommend Murray Benson, city solicitor of Baltimore, as collector of internal revenue of this district to succeed M. Hampton Magruder, retiring because of ill health. He said Benson also has the support of Senator Tydings of Maryland.

While at the White House, Radcliffe said he took occasion to renew the suggestion he had made previously that the President go on the air. The Maryland Senator said he feels some persons believe Washington's publicized rows "are a summary of what's going on here" in the whole governmental field and that constructive efforts are being overlooked. He said periodic reports to the British public by Prime Minister Churchill have been valuable in England.

Editors Advising OWI Urge More War News for U. S. Public

By the Associated Press

Roy Roberts, managing editor of the Kansas City Star, was elected chairman yesterday of the new advisory committee set up by the domestic branch of the Office of War Information.

The group, appointed immediately after Palmer Hoyt, publisher of the Portland Oregoinian, took over as domestic director of the War Information agency, set up as its primary premise the declaration that "the American people are entitled as a right . . . to full and purely factual information concerning public events and the acts of public officials."

It asserted that dissemination of such information should be through regular media such as newspaper, trade journals, magazines, radio and the motion pictures, and that there should be no shutting off of access to original sources of news.

The committee was formed while Congress was making a drastic cut in funds for OWI's domestic operations. The group held its first meeting here yesterday, and later issued the following statement of preliminary findings:

"OWI was called into existence largely as a result of the insistence of newspapers and other media of information that the American people should be assured in war, as never before, of a full and untrammeled flow of news as to the civil and military activity of the United States.

"The committee is convinced that OWI does have a real function in the prosecution of the war and that it has eliminated a great deal of the overlapping in the old setup.

"Obviously in one day the committee could reach no definitive conclusions concerning many of the problems presented to it. It does feel, however, that there are certain definite principles which should govern the domestic branch of OWI and it is for the advance of those principles that the committee has accepted its assignment.

"These principles are:

"1. The American people are entitled as a right—and as a necessary condition of the maintenance of free government and winning the war—to full and purely factual information concerning public events and the acts of public officials, entirely free of propaganda.

"2. It is vital that such information be disseminated only through the existing media of public information such as newspapers, trade journals, magazines, radio, and the motion pictures.

"3. OWI can perform a highly useful and necessary function in gathering and coordinating the news of the vastly complicated and far-flung activities of the Government, but in this process it should not in any wise shut off the press and other media of information from direct access to the sources of news or in any way circumscribe the right of inquiry which is the very essence of free reporting.

"4. The committee suggested that the OWI call into conference representatives of the corps of Washington correspondents, both press and radio, in order to further cooperation in the collection of news and to keep open the primary channels of information as far as is consistent with national security.

"5. The committee believes that the American public is entitled to all military and naval information which will not aid the enemy.

"6. The committee received conflicting reports as to the effect of the abolition of the field service. The committee will request OWI to poll newspapers and radio stations as to their desire for the recreation of a field service operating under the same principles that govern OWI's Washington activity. The committee feels that a streamlined, effectively conducted field service might be more economical to the Government in both money and manpower, than for the separate agencies to employ information men of their own.

"7. In conclusion the committee feels that the maintenance of civilian morale is fundamental to the winning of the war and that a full sharing with the people by government of what is going on is the only certain guarantee of this morale."

The advisory committee's membership: Roberts, L. L. Winship, managing editor, Boston Globe; George W. Healy, jr., managing editor, New Orleans Times-Picayune; Paul Bellamy, editor, Cleveland Plain Dealer; Mark Etheridge, publisher, Louisville Courier-Journal; Gardner Cowles, jr., editor and publisher, Des Moines Register and Tribune, whom Hoyt succeeded as domestic director; Fred Gaertner, jr., managing editor, Detroit News; Wilbur Forrest, assistant editor, New York Herald Tribune; H. D. Paulson, editor, Fargo Forum.

Cowles was unable to attend and he was represented by Basil L. Walters, executive editor of the Minnesapolis Star-Journal.

The Gallup Poll

Dewey, Willkie, MacArthur Are Favorites Of Republicans in Three Largest States

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., July 13.—Governor Dewey of New York, Wendell Willkie, and General Douglas MacArthur are the three top choices for the 1944 G. O. P. nomination among Republican voters in the three most populous States of the Union—New York, Pennsylvania and Illinois.

That is the indication from a series of Institute surveys whose results constitute an early preview of the popular standing of various Republican presidential possibilities. The three States will send an estimated 222 delegates to the G. O. P. nominating convention, or one-fifth of the total for the whole country.

Although Governor Dewey has disavowed any desire to be a candidate, Republican voters continue to give him a commanding popular lead in New York and in Illinois at present. While Governor Dewey also leads in Pennsylvania, Wendell Willkie runs him a fairly close second in that State.

Mr. Willkie's strength, so far as these three States are concerned, is highest in Pennsylvania and lowest in Illinois. General MacArthur, who denies that he has any political intentions, is virtually as popular as Mr. Willkie in Illinois as a 1944 possibility, the survey finds.

Governor John W. Bricker of Ohio is fourth choice for 1944 among the rank and file of Republicans in the three States.

In conducting its survey the Institute handed each Republican voter a list of seven Republicans who have been mentioned most frequently by political writers as possible candidates for 1944. Each voter was asked:

"Which one of these men would you prefer as the Republican candidate for President next year?

New York

Dewey	53%
Willkie	27
MacArthur	8
Bricker	5
Stassen	4
Saltonstall	2
Warren	1

Pennsylvania

Dewey	38%
Willkie	33
MacArthur	14
Bricker	9
Stassen	5
Warren	1
Saltonstall	*

Illinois

Dewey	41%
Willkie	19
MacArthur	18
Bricker	11
Stassen	10
Saltonstall	1
Warren	*

*Less than 1 per cent.

Obviously events between now and the nominating convention may bring other candidates to the fore as possibilities, or alter the relative popular standing of the leaders today. Future changes in popularity will be recorded by Institute surveys.

Presidential nominees are picked by delegates in convention, not by the party rank and file, and the personal popularity of a candidate is not necessarily an indication of what the delegates will do. However, in the case of the last two G. O. P. presidential nominations—those of 1936 and 1940—the candidates selected by the conventions were the choices of the rank and file at the time.

Political observers will be especially interested in the comparative popularity of Governor Dewey and Mr. Willkie in New York State.

Court Permits Attorney's Wife To Change Name

Mrs. Larry W. Edwards of 4707 Connecticut Avenue, was given permission by District Court yesterday to change her given name from Larry to Mary, on the ground that she could thereby "end the confusion arising from the fact that Larry is generally considered a masculine name.

Her attorney and husband, Walter M. Edwards, asked whether there were other reasons for the change, said that when Mrs. Edwards signed her name, it was generally assumed that his name was Larry which was embarrassing.

"You see," he said, "my wife was supposed to be a boy named after her father, but it didn't work out. She never liked the name Larry anyway."

Mrs. Edwards is employed as a secretary with the War Production Board.

Feed Shortage Acute In Winchester Area

Special Dispatch to The Post

Winchester, Va., July 13.—The feed shortage has been heightened in this section with the announcement of local manufacturers that their supply of mixed feed, middlings, corn meal feed, bran, and scratch feed is exhausted and there is no indication at the moment when manufacture may be resumed.

In part the shortage resulted from the order freezing corn, it was stated, and by contracts for feed for poultry in which manufacturers are interested.

Should the situation continue, farmers with hogs to fatten may be compelled to use barley and other products than corn or wheat, it was stated.

'Inedibles' For Europe

By the Associated Press

Squid Diet Studied

New York, July 13.—They may be considered inedible by Americans, but canned Pacific Coast squid and a paste of fish are likely to be important menu items in Europe after the war.

Dewey Anderson of the Office of Foreign Relief and Rehabilitation told the Natoinal Victory Garden Institute today his office is busy experimenting with high-protein foods regarded as unpalatable by Americans but which other nationalities enjoy.

Food used to feed people in liberated countries, he said, "will in no way impinge on" supplies needed for American consumption. He added, too, his office does not intend to continue to feed those countries, but to rehabilitate them so they may start raising their own crops soon.

"We are canning on the West Coast squid, a high protein food, which will be extremely valuable to the starving people of Greece," he said.

Foreign-born groups in New York, Pittsburgh and other cities are acting as guinea pigs for his office, Anderson said, by eating various foods and then reporting their opinions.

"We had a fish paste none of us could stomach," he continued. "It was made of fish not usually eaten and looked and tasted bad to us. With the help of these nationality groups we have developed it into something palatable to them and it is likely to go into large production soon."

A soybean mix, which Anderson described as "our crowning glory," will be the first emergency feeding liberated areas. He estimated at the present time 150 million in Europe were in dire need of food today.

Paul C. Stark of Louisiana, Mo., president of the institute, estimated more than 50 million Americans had been working in 20 million victory gardens this year and would produce food worth one billion dollars.

WMC Directors From Four States Confer at Capital

War Manpower Commission field directors from four States and the District of Columbia were in session all day yesterday for special instruction and discussion relative to recent changes in WMC plans and present labor conditions within Region 4.

The meeting was called by Leo B. Werts, acting regional WMC director. Region 4 consists of the District, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and North Carolina.

Second of a series of labor-management WMC committee monthly regional meetings has been scheduled at Raleigh, N. C., for Thursday, according to Werts.

Special reports of various manpower training courses will be made at that time, Werts explained.

'Crazy' Cottage Scene

By John Steinbeck

Befuddles U. S. Sergeant

London.—The sergeant lay in the grass and pulled grass and bit off the tender stems and chewed them. It was Sunday, and a number of people were lying about, sailors and soldiers and even a few civilians. Across the path a line of people were fishing in the Serpentine, sitting on rented chairs, fishing in water that was stirred with the oars of boats and kicking swans. Each fisherman had his little audience.

The sergeant said: "This is a crazy country. Look at that, there hasn't been a fish caught there all day, and they go right on with it. Maybe they're not after fish. It's a crazy country, and it's getting me nuts, too." He spat out a little chewed wad of green grass stems. "I've got something bothering me," he said. "It's a ghost story. I don't believe it happened, and I know it happened. Only I don't believe in ghosts. I've been thinking about it, sniffing around it, and I can't make any sense out of it.

"You see," he said, "I'm at a little station up in the country. Not a very big outfit. There is a village about a mile from camp, and in the evening we walk in and get a couple of glasses of beer and try to figure out this darts game."

Catch Excites Crowd

Far up the line of fishermen a man caught a fish about the size of a sardine and caused so much excitement that he was surrounded by people in a moment. The sergeant chuckled: "I used to work salmon in the Columbia River," he said, and let it go at that. "Well, anyway," he said, "it came on toward dark, and I've got some paper work to do, so I figured I'd walk back to camp. The other fellows weren't ready to go yet. They're kidding the barmaid, telling her they know movie stars. So I started out alone.

"I've been over that little road at least a hundred times. I knew every foot of it, I guess. It's a narrow, little road, with hedges on both sides, so you can't see into the fields. The road is kind of cut down, like a trench. It's not a very dark night, at least there is some starlight, and you can see big clouds, like it was going to rain." He stopped and seemed to be considering whether he should go on at all. He was looking across the Serpentine at the little pavilion where the line of people wait all day for their turn to rent a boat.

No Blackout Curtains

The sergeant made up his mind suddenly. "About half way back there was a light out on to the road. There was a little cottage, kind of, with the hedge coming up to it on both sides. There is a garden in front, a fence and then this big square window with little panes. Well, the light is coming out of that window. I looked right through and could see the room. It was kind of pleasant. There was a lamp on the table, and a fire in a small fireplace. It wasn't a very bright light, but you could see pretty well. There's a white cat asleep on the seat of a chair, and sitting beside the table under the lamp is a woman about 50, I should say, and she is sewing on something. I stood there. Peeping-Tomed for a couple of minutes. It was peaceful and cozy looking and nice.

"In a minute I walked on. There was something bothering me in the back of my mind. And then I thought 'Sure that's what it is, no blackout curtains.' I hadn't seen a light coming out of a window at night for ten months—that's how long I've been over. I was going to go back and tell that woman to pull her blackout curtains in case some country cop came along. She'd get a stiff fine. I turned around and looked back. I couldn't see the cottage, but I could see the light shining out in the road. Well then, I thought, 'What the hell, maybe no cop will come by.' It looked so nice, the room and the fire that you could look in on. You get awful tired of the blackout."

The sergeant picked up a little twig, dug at a grass root with it. "I walked along, but there was something that kept ticking away in my head, something I couldn't get hold of. It began to sprinkle a little bit of rain, but not enough to hurt anything. I thought about the work I had to do, but I couldn't get away from the feeling that there was something wrong with something."

He dug out his grass root, and it came up with a little lump of soil in it. He shook the dirt out of it. "I was just about to turn in the camp when it plumped into my mind. Now, this is what it is. And I've been thinking about it, and I can't figure it out. There isn't any cottage there, but there is four stone walls all black with fire. Early in the blitz some Jerry dropped a fire bomb on that cottage."

His fingers were restless. They were trying to plant the grass roots again in the hole they had come out of. "You see what worries me about the whole thing is this," he said. "I just don't believe stuff like that."

Grew Says Japs Warned U. S. Not To 'Fire' on Nazis

New York, July 13 (AP).—Former Ambassador Joseph C. Grew said here tonight that as early as the spring of 1941 Japan's foreign minister had warned him that if the United States got into a shooting war with Germany, "even in defense against the German submarines," Japan would be obliged to go to war against the United States.

(The "shooting war" against German submarines began in Septembeer, 1941; Japan attacked at Pearl Harbor December 7.)

In an address for delivery at Columbia University, Grew described a conversation he had with Yosuke Matsuoka, then foreign minister, at Matsuoka's home in Tokyo in the spring of 1941.

said Matsuoka told him democracy was bankrupt and that "this is the day of the great military powers."

Matsuoka expressed the view, Grew related, that Germany would "unquestionably" win the war in Europe and that Japan would be the "stabilizing force" in the Far East.

"And then he went on to say," Grew continued, "that if the United States should get into a shooting war with Germany, even in defense against the German submarines, Japan would be obliged, on the basis of Article 3 of the Tripartite Pact, to go to war with us."

Washington Hospitals Adopt WMC's Efficiency Program

Washington hospital supervisors who last week completed the first round of an initial course of training within industry, given to District hospitals by the War Manpower Commission, are preparing to put their new-found technique into effect.

In their staff work—from kitchen and laundry up to the surgical department—will be applied the scientifically developed methods of training new workers and maintaining employe-employer relations which have helped cut absenteeism and waste in war production throughout the country.

The background of the system is as interesting as its effects:

When the Government found that production was lagging in many essential war industries because of constant turnover, absenteeism, and inadequate training techniques, Channing Dooley of Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. and Walter Dietz of Western Electric were called to Washington.

These men, with long records of successful management, made a survey of the difficulties and, on the basis of their own experience, undertook a solution which would apply to all types of industry and workers.

Principal immediate problems were the precious time spent in training, waste of materials from sloppy workmanship and injuries to workmen from careless handling of machines.

Appointed as $1-a-year men by WMC to head what they named the Training Within Industry Section, Dooley and Dietz hired 200 instructors and plunged into the Nation-wide task.

Here are instances of what they achieved:

The Essex Wire Corporation of Detroit reported that waste in vital materials had been reduced by 34 per cent after its personnel took the TWI program.

The training period for loom tenders in a war-loaded New England mill was cut from two weeks to 20 minutes by TWI methods.

A textile inspector, who himself had taken a month to learn his job, was able to teach it to a green employee in half a day—after a TWI instructor explained how.

Just about a year ago, a stab was first made at the equally serious plight of the nation's hospitals. J. H. Rottenberger, principal training specialist for TWI, thought the technique ought to work as successfully here as in industry.

A St. Paul (Minn.) hospital was the first guinea pig. And in a short time it reported that overall use of TWI methods in training had enabled it to double the number of patients handled without any increase in staff.

In another enterprising hospital in St. Paul, a surgical supervisor streamlined her operating room techniques along lines advised by TWI. Three separate processes were made into one, saving considerable time for teaching and preparation.

More than 600,000 supervisors have been TWI-trained to date, 35,000 in the District and Maryland alone. Locally, they have come from such companies as the Washington Gaslight Co., Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Co., Pepco, etc.

Credit for recognizing the potential worth of the TWI program for Washington's hospitals goes to Dr. John Orem, superintendent of the Sibley Memorial Hospital. At a recent meeting of the Association of Hospital Superintendents, of which he is president, Dr. Orem introduced Charles L. Smith and sold the idea to his associates.

The 11 Washington hospital supervisors who completed the course last week will take two additional 10-hour sessions after they have put to practical use what they have learned thus far. The two new courses are called "Job Methods"—improvement of work techniques to cut down waste, and "Job Relations"—or how to get along with people.

The trainees are eager to voice their opinions of what Inspector Charles L. Smith had taught them.

"You've no idea what this will mean to my staff," declared Miss Jessie Griffith, assistant superintendent of Homeopathic Hospital. "We have had a terrible turnover, but I think I've learned the solution to that!"

Sister Jean Marie, head nurse at Providence Hospital, was anxious to start at once instructing associate supervisors. "I shall meet with them immediately," she said.

"It's invaluable, in my opinion," said Miss Irene Toth, assistant dietitian at Doctors Hospital, "and I was frankly skeptical when I came here five days ago."

TWI-man Smith grinned at them. "We always start out with doubting Thomases," he commented, "but they come around pretty well. Anyway, it always works."

Dow Magnesium Plant Has Fire

Marysville, Mich., July 13 (AP).—Fire that flared out of control in a unit of Dow Magnesium Corp's new 20 million-dollar plant here this morning caused damage estimated at $500,000.

Spread of the flames to other units was averted, firemen said, because the affected section is at the extreme edge and the wind blew the blaze away from other parts of the factory. One volunteer fireman was hurt.

RAINBOW ROOM'S HAPPY BIRTHDAY. For these eight years (it seems much shorter) the Rainbow Room of the Hotel Hamilton has been a center of sweetness and light and fun a-plenty. Come Friday night they're going to toss the birthday party colossal. Arthur Rabe, new manager of the Hamilton and a postgraduate in the art of staging parties, has planned all manner of didoes including, but naturally, a very mountain of a birthday cake—so huge that every one of the hundreds of guests will get a slab.

Bill Gibson, guitrist with Paul Kain's band at Glen Echo, is deep in plans for the postwar production of the electra harp. He collaborated in its design and, we're told, has a slice of this unique instrument.

GIRLS! A BREAK! Washington girls are invited to attend a dance sponsored by the National Association of Government Employes in the Washington Hotel Ballroom tonight. A group of 300 young servicemen have been invited through the USO. There'll be a reception committee of 25 girls to introduce partners. Who knows—maybe you'll meet the one 'n' only.

PROFIT AND LOSS. Julian Richards, sagacious manager of the Old New Orleans, is one of the few who wrenched a profit out of the lashing tail end of the great Florida boom of the twenties. He took 40 acres his firm was stuck with and raised tomatoes on it to the tune of $2000 profit per acre for the season. . . . Maestro Roy Comfort of the Lounge Riviera says he'd be a rich man today if his great-gramma hadn't persuaded his great-grampa to trade their farm for a brick home in Philadelphia. The farm is the present site of Bristol, Pa. Ah-wah!

Officers at Fort Washington have asked Ruby Foo's to serve them a Chinese dinner for 800 once a week. Almond-eyed Virginia Dare, R. F. head lady, says she'd love to do it, but she doesn't know what she'd use for chefs.

CAVIAR IN ENTERTAINMENT. Oscar Levant's witty "Blame It on My Youth" as sung with pernicious charm by Mary Howard at the Troika. . . . The way Roy Smeck gives the gun to "Hawaiian War Chant" via electric guitar at El Patio. . . . The high-toned manner in which Eddie Gomez struts a samba while he sings it with Carlos Molina's orchestra at Del Rio. . . . The pastoral charm of "Shepherds' Serenade" as violined by Venesko at the Balalaika.

THOSE OPTIMISTS! Peter Arban, partner in Treasure Island, says he could have cheerfully wrung our neck at a recent luncheon of the Optimists Club There he was all serene—and the chairman publicly congratulated him on his growing fame as a very handsome fellow, then read a paragraph from "Ringside" about Peter's good looks. Peter says, "Gosh, I never was so upset!"

Sandy Sandifer and Betsy Jones of the Metronome Room have gone melo in "The Burglar's Song" which prefigures Sandy as the burglar and Betsy as a willing burglaree. It's made an instantaneous hit.

DARDANELLIANA. Mayfair's luscious girl maestro, Dardanelle, acquired that Southern accent in her native Mississippi. She attended Louisiana State University where she majored in public school music, was staff pianist. After a brief whack at teaching she was booked for entertaining, and has decided to save up her teaching career for her thirties.

OF PRETTY CREATURES. Georgiana of the Anchor Room has bangs that bounce up like a pompadour, tops 'em with poises . . . Hi Hat's Peggy Leonard has sun-bathed herself to a beautiful beige, needs no stocking make-up . . . Mary Le Marr of the King Cole Room likes red because she says "red makes me feel awake." . . . Jane Marlow of Restaurant "823" is wearing blue linen that matches her eyes. Picked by accident—yes? . . . Maybe we shouldn't tell, but that exotic lovely, Felician of the Copocabana is a mamma. We talk too much, probably . . . Ethel Lynn, the acrobatic ballerina of the Lotus, is booked for a Hollywood musical. You'll be seeing her in technicolor.

Ration Board In Arlington Lists New Schedule

The Arlington County Rationing Board will be open for business in every commodity Monday, Wednesday and Friday, from 9 a. m. to 3:30 p. m., and Wednesday from 7 to 10 p. m., effective immediately, the board chairman announced yesterday.

The price-control division will be open every day, except Saturday, and the information desk will, in addition, remain open Wednesday evening.

The new schedule does away with the staggered commodity system which, it was pointed out, had worked some hardship on persons wishing to transact all rationing business at one time.

The alternate days, it was said, will be used by the reduced clerical staff for mailing out 30,000 gas renewals and 21,000 fuel-oil applications.

"Toughest trip in my book... but the crew made it seem easy!"

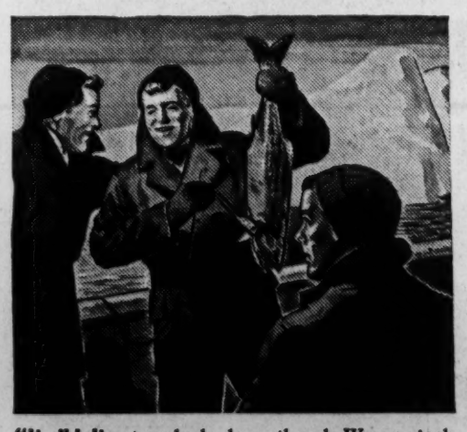
The Skipper of an Alcoa ship tells this true story of a gruelling six months trip that got even tougher after the ship reached port... and of a crew that treated it like a holiday cruise.

"Our convoy ran into a terrific blow the first day out. Some of the men in the crew were fresh out of Maritime School. First real ocean trip for many of them. But they were okay . . . sure handled themselves like veterans.

"Eventually our course took us into waters where our charts were practically useless. Mostly we had to depend on native pilots to guide us through inlets . . . jagged ledges and huge ice floes were a constant peril. Believe me, it was touch and go most of the time . . . with trouble every inch of the way.

"When we finally reached port, we had to anchor offshore. There were no docks. The only way to unload was onto shallow steel barges. It was a terrific job . . . wind blowing a gale, and a blizzard that was half snow, half sleet.

"Those barges were tricky to handle . . . bounced around like sardine cans . . . ice formed quickly on their gunwales. The unloading crew had to be as sure-footed as mountain goats. Even so, we fished several out. No fun to be ducked in water that cold—20 degrees.



"It didn't get anybody down, though. We sure took a whale of a beating . . . it was tough going for such kids. But they just laughed off the whole thing. That afternoon a bunch of seamen were on deck—fishin'—happy as if they were on a vacation! Now how does Hitler think he could ever beat guys like that!"

The American Merchant Marine needs the services of every experienced man who has a license as a deck officer, or as an engineer. If you hold such a license, and are now working ashore, you may serve your country far better by going back to sea, even though the present shore job is war work. The hundreds of new ships which will be completed this year will need men like you as officers. Get full information at the nearest office of the U. S. Employment Service or write the War Shipping Administration, Washington, D. C.

Cash Dividend Payments Rise 5 Pct. in June

Cash dividend payments in June were 5 per cent higher than a year ago, the Commerce Department reported yesterday, noting that the month was the first this year to show an increase over a corresponding period of 1942.

Dividend payments for the month aggregated $390,500,000 to bring the total for the first six months of this year to $1,576,000,000—a 1 per cent decline from the $1,598,000,000 figure for the first half of 1942.

The department pointed to equal second quarter payments in the two years as contrasted to a 3 per cent decline during the first quarter of this year, adding: "Continuation of this improvement will result in dividend payments for 1943 slightly in excess of those of last year."

Manufacturing corporations paid dividends totaling $235,000,000 during June, an 8 per cent increase over the same month last year. Largest percentage increase, 65 per cent, was recorded by the transportation equipment industry whose dividends rose from $8,500,000 in June, 1942, to $14,100,000.

Declines in the manufacturing group were noted in the automobile, iron and steel, and paper and printing industries.

In other classifications dividend payments of railroads, finance and communications companies were up, while those of mining, trade and heat, light and power groups were down.

Business Briefs Of D. C. Interest

Fourth in Population Gain

With an increase of 176,399 in civilian population during the three-year period from April, 1940, to March, 1943, Washington ranked fourth among the cities of the country in such expansion, according to an estimate by Arno J. Johnson of the J. Walter Thompson Co. in Advertising Age.

The largest gain was 370,126 at Detroit, followed by 236,666 in the San Francisco-Oakland area and 185,982 at Los Angeles.

Other large increases were Norfolk-Portsmouth-Newport News area, 171,860; St. Louis, 111,276, and San Diego, 106,530.

The total population of the United States was estimated at 135,200,000 on March 1, an increase of 4,200,000 since the 1940 census. Because of the tremendous expansion in the armed forces, however, it was estimated that the country's civilian population actually decreased 2,800,000 in the three years, to 128,500,000.

Hotel Occupancy Rates

The room occupancy rate of Washington hotels was 93 per cent in June, the highest in the country, according to a survey by Horwath & Horwath, accountants. Hotels in other large cities showed occupancy rates in June as follows: New York City, 88 per cent; Chicago, 84 per cent; Philadelphia, 82 per cent; Cleveland, 85 per cent; Detroit, 89 per cent.

Assets Set New Peak

The seventy-first semiannual statement of Columbia Federal Savings and Loan Association, released yesterday, disclosed that assets of the 35-year-old institution have topped the eight million dollar mark for the first time. The balance sheet totals $8,280,216 with reserves and undivided profits of $446,210.

Clarence E. Kefauver, executive vice president, stated that the semiannual dividend paid to shareholders on June 30 was at the rate of 3 per cent a year.

A. T. & T. Aide Resigns

The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. announced yesterday that Maj. Gen. William H. Harrison, on leave of absence since July, 1940, had resigned as vice president of the company. General Harrison was appointed chief of procurement and distribution service of the United States Army Signal Corps.

A. L. Wins on Doerr's Home Run, 5-3

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Philadelphia, July 13.—The Brooklyn story won't down, even with baseball supposedly absorbed in the All-Star game. It's still the most engaging mess of the 1943 season and where it will stop nobody knows, except there's a pretty good suspicion that Leo Durocher is a gone duck as the Dodgers' manager.

POVICH

Joe Williams, in the New York World Telegram, yesterday bluntly advised Branch Rickey to do Durocher a favor and fire him. Williams declared Durocher had lost control of the situation which now is an intolerable one for Durocher following his suspension of Buck Newsom and the players' threatened strike.

The strangest twist is that Newsom, a troublesome character wherever he has played, is emerging as something of a martyr from the whole deal. He had the good luck to get in dutch with a manager who wasn't liked by others on the team and between the pair of 'em, they sided with Newsom against Durocher.

Newsom is now riding so high that he declares he not only will refuse to accept three days' loss of pay during his suspension, but wants a public acknowledgement that he wasn't docked. Big Buck unwittingly produced a laugh when he says, "I am very much embarrassed by all this."

The man who will probably end up by taking over Durocher's job is Billy Herman, the Dodgers' second baseman, who has been the team's best ball player. General Manager Branch Rickey finds himself in a difficult spot with the New York and Brooklyn press alligned almost solidly against Durocher.

It's no comfort to Durocher to know that Rickey is his boss. Rickey never did set great store by a manager. He has always acted as if a manager were the easiest thing for a ball team to acquire. When he bossed the Cardinals, Rickey fired Rogers Hornsby and Bill McKechnie after they had won pennants. He fired Bob O'Farrell, whose club finished second, and he released Managers Billy Southworth and Ray Blades in midseason.

New York and Brooklyn baseball writers are screaming because Durocher tried to give the run-around to Tim Cohane of the World Telly who first quoted the Dodgers' manager on Newsome's suspension. At a meeting on Sunday, Durocher admitted that Cohane had quoted him correctly, but the writers were still mad.

When Arky Vaughan, siding with Newsom in his wrangle with Durocher, turned in his uniform, one press report quoted Vaughan as saying to Durocher, "Take this uniform and do with it as you please." But the Brooklyn Eagle declared Vaughan had used no such polite language. "What Vaughan told Durocher to do with his uniform," said the Eagle's Tommy Holmes, "was both unprintable and impossible."

Meanwhile, the Brooklyn fans themselves are probably the least agitated by the goings-on. In their own vernacular it's a "swell bit of rhubarb." They like it, without taking sides. If such as Dixie Walker or Dolf Camilli, their favorite players, had been involved they might have felt outraged, but as it is, they think it's wonderful.

A combination of circumstances brought the mess about. On any club where there is a Durocher and a Newsom, matters can't be tranquil very long. His own players have no great fondness for Durocher. They play ball for him without admiring much. In a pennant winning year they could put up with his sarcasm and cutting cracks, but this year the Dodgers are winning no pennant.

Durocher was on a spot before the season started when he had to humble himself before Rickey to get a new contract. He had to promise no more card playing or race betting. He signed a contract with a 10-day discharge clause. The players, who liked Coach Charley Dressen, thought Durocher let Dressen down when he didn't argue for him to be retained.

With Brooklyn fans, Durocher never did enjoy full popularity. He wasn't their kind of a guy. Durocher was a Broadwayite and Stork Club frequenter. Flatbush fans like their ball players to mix in the community. Durocher rarely attended Brooklyn functions.

But to what may be the last, Durocher demonstrated he has courage. The Sunday after the rebellion, with the park packed, he took Dolf Camilli out for a pinch hitter. That was inviting trouble because Brooklyn never envisoned the day when Camilli was withdrawn for a pinch hitter. But Durocher did it, and got away with it when his pinch hitter drove in the tying run. Durocher is brave enough, but that probably won't save his job.

Hart Easily Whips Conway at Stadium

By Al Costello
Post Staff Writer

Al Hart, 226, Army War College Negro soldier, and a 2-to-1 betting favorite, scored an unanimous and perfectly obvious 10-round decision over lanky Clent Conway, 176, another Negro soldier from Fort Monmouth, N. J., although the 4505 paying customers at Griffith Stadium last night, as usual, hooted the announcement that proclaimed "Big Al" the winner.

Reason, no doubt, was the sudden and inexplicable flurry of body punches Conway suddenly produced in the fifth round, which caused Hart to drop to the canvas and take a nine count. That, however, was just about all the damage Conway did to the Army War College soldier and the decision was as fair as a platinum blonde.

Conway Nearly Out

Before Conway put Hart on the deck in the fifth, his biggest threat was a ferocious leer which didn't affect Hart in the least. In the third and fourth rounds, Hart had Conway in bad shape with a series of hard rights and a left hook to the mid-section, in the fifth, which caused Conway's knees to buckle. In the seventh, eighth and again in ninth, Conway was in bad shape and one more good punch on any one of those five occasions doubtless would have finished Clent. However, Conway always danced away and out of danger as Hart rushed to no avail.

The bout, while interesting, was replete with holding and pulling and mauling on the part of both parties, each equally guilty. Hart continued to pursue the same tactics he so suddenly adopted in his last bout when he rushed Claudio Villar relentlessly to score a kayo in one round. Hart's 50-pound weight advantage told a plenty on the tiring Conway in the closing stages. On The Post score sheet, Hart won nine rounds. The 4505 incidentally, dropped a net gate of $5846.77 into the box, which satisfied Promoter Joe Turner after Monday's postponement.

Latsios Wins

Nick Latsios, 150, Alexandria's Golden Greek, scored a T. K. O. over Lee Rosan, 147, Baltimore, in 39 seconds of the third round in what was supposed to be the eight-round semifinal. Rosan took two counts of nine before Referee Marty Gallagher mercifully stopped it.

Bobby Brown, 157½, Washington Negro, kayoed Bebe Washington, 156½, another local Negro in 26 seconds of the fifth round.

Two three-round kayoes featured the preliminaries. Jimmy McGriff, 136½, local Negro, stopped Harry Alimo, 138, Baltimore, with a hard right cross in 1:07 of the third and Taffy Cummings, 141, Royal British Navy, put away Johnny Marino, 142, Baltimore, with a sharp left also in the third, after flooring Marino earlier in the round with a continuous body barrage.

31,938 See Leonard Win Over Cooper

Bosox Infielder Scores Three Runs In Second Inning; DiMaggio Stars

By Shirley Povich
Post Staff Writer

Philadelphia, July 13.—Down in eighth place in the batting order, the American League found the power to beat the National League All-Stars tonight—the home run swing of Boston's Bobby Doerr which produced three runs and a 5-3 victory.

Before 31,938 Shibe Park fans who contributed $65,174 to the major leagues' ball and bat fund for service teams, Pitcher Morton Cooper, Cardinal ace, came to grief again tonight even as American League home runs beat him last year.

Cooper carried a 1-0 lead into the second inning and, paradoxically, found himself trailing, 3-1, on the American Leaguers' first hit of the game. It was Doerr's homer that soared into the lower deck of left field after Cooper had walked Chet Laabs and Jake Early in succession with one out.

And this was a Yankee-less triumph for the American League. For the first time in history, no Yankee player found his way into the American League line-up. Manager Joe McCarthy kept on the bench the five Yankes named to the All-Star squad in contrast to National League Manager Billy Southworth's starting line-up, which contained five of his world champion Cardinals.

Leonard Gets Victory

Washington's Dutch Leonard was the winning pitcher, holding the National Leaguers to two hits and one run in his three-inning starting role. Cooper, first of the four National League hurlers, was charged with the defeat.

The National Leaguers outhit the American All-Stars, 10 to 8, but they could never catch up with the damage wrought by Doerr's home run. They collected their last two runs off Boston's Tex Hughson after Hal Newhouser of the Tigers theld them hitless for the middle three innings.

Vince DiMaggio of the Pirates, upholding the proud DiMaggio baseball heritage, bravely tried to keep the National Leaguers in the ball game with three consecutive hits, the last a home run off Hughson to start the ninth.

Three Big Hits

DiMaggio singled with a man on base in the fourth, and in the seventh he tripled against the left field wall to set a National League run in motion. His ninth-inning homer stamped him the batting hero of the game.

Paradoxically, the four National League pitchers struck out 10 men while only one National Leaguer was a strike-out victim.

For the first time in the 11-year history of the game, the fans saw a Yankee-less team of American League all-stars take the field. The Yankees were the only American League team not represented in the starting line-up.

After surveying his seven-man pitching staff, Manager Joe McCarthy came up with a surprise choice, the well-rested Dutch Leonard, knuckle-baller of the Nats. It followed that Jake Early, Washington's battery mate, would be the starting catcher.

Leonard in Trouble

Morton Cooper of the Cardinals was the National League's starting pitcher, despite a slight accident during the afternoon when he suffered mild burns on the middle finger of his pitching hand while lighting a cigarette.

Leonard had no immediate success and the National League moved into a 1-to-0 lead in the first inning. Technically, the run was earned, but Leonard was operating in ill luck.

Stan Hack pasted Leonard's first pitch of the game for a bounding single over second, and on a hit-and-run play with the right-handed

Sewell So Sorry; League Accepts His Apologies

Special Dispatch to The Post

Philadelphia, July 13.—The American League today accepted the apology of Manager Luke Sewell of the Browns, who in a statement last week declared the league's umpires favored the New York Yankees.

Sewell later declared that he had not intended to impugn the honesty of the umpires, and retracted his charges.

After the Ball Was Over—And Bobby Came Marching Home

Bobby Doerr, second baseman of the Boston Red Sox, smacked a Mort Cooper pitch into the left-field stands for a home run in the second inning of the All-Star game last night in Philadelphia, scoring Brownie Chet Laabs and Jake Early of the Nats ahead of him. Laabs and Early had walked. The Americans won on the strength of Doerr's clout, 5-3. Early, who caught the entire game for Manager Joe McCarthy, appears as elated as if he had hit the homer which gave his pitching teammate, Dutch Leonard, a working margin

Nats Given Okay on 17 Night Games

Griff's Plea Heeded; Blanket Permission Granted; Sundays, Holidays Excepted

Philadelphia, July 13.—Blanket permission for the Washington club to play as many night games as it desired under the Griffith Stadium lights for the remainder of the 1943 season was won by Clark Griffith today in a joint meeting of the two major leagues.

Griffith immediately announced that 17 games, in addition to the nine already scheduled would be played at night.

His new program thus means night baseball in all instances for Washington, except on Sundays and holidays for the remainder of the season.

The Nats' owner indicated, however, that he would try the experiment of twilight games, starting at 7 p. m., and finishing under the lights. If they prove popular, as they were last year, the twilight games may be staged as frequently as the night games.

Originally allotted 21 night games at home, the Nats have already played 12. The attendance figures, showing an average of neary 14,000 nightly, were a potent factor in winning Griffith permission to play the remainder of his home games at night, except on Sunday and Labor Day.

Visiting clubs this year have been finding Washington the most profitable city in the league.

Both the American and National Leagues voted unanimously to grant Griffith's request, and Commissioner Kenesaw Landis, who last year balked at a similar request by Griffith, gave his hearty approval today.

"Wartime conditions in Washington are such that baseball will better cooperate by permitting the Washington club to play more games at night," said Landis. National League President Ford Frick also went on record as approving the night games because of "peculiar Washington working hours."

Montgomery Arrives Today

Bob Montgomery, would lightweight boxing champion who upset Beau Jack for the title in Madison Square Garden some weeks ago, reports here today at 12:30 o'clock.

This afternoon at 2:30 o'clock the champion steps through his first workout locally at the Green Oaks Country Club while opening final preparation for his scheduled 10-round feature with Frankie Wills, District welterweight champion, at Griffith Stadium Tuesday night.

Montgomery, who terminated preliminary drills in Philadelphia yesterday, originally was scheduled to establish open air training quarters at Tom O'Donnell's Griffith Farms.

Lieut. Lou Zornow hurled a seven-inning no-hit, no-run game yesterday for the Headquarters Marines as they defeated the B. M. Navy Yard club, 10-0, in a Departmental League game played on the Ellipse. Zornow, who once hurled for Rochester in the International League, fanned ten but he walked six. He also contributed three hits to his team's attack.

Leroy Smith, Hugh Clines Tie at 143 for Federal Golf Title

Playoff Set For Sunday At 18 Holes

Cliff McKimmie's Bid for Three-Way Deadlock Falls One Stroke Short

By Merrell W. Whittlesey
Post Staff Writer

Two transplanted Government workers from the South, J. Leroy Smith of South Carolina and Hugh H. (Spike) Clines of Kentucky, tied for the championship in the nineteenth annual tournament of the Federal Golf Association yesterday at Bannockburn with 3-over-par totals for the 36-hole route.

Smith, a former District Public Links titlist, passed his playing partner, R. Cliff McKimmie, the golf pro turned D. G. Government worker, on the thirty-fifth hole and finished with 73, 70—143 to McKimmie's pair of 72's for a 144.

Two foursomes back, Clines, a three-time Bluegrass State amateur champion, pulled into a tie with Smith with a birdie deuce on the thirty-fourth hole and parred the last two for a deadlocking 72, 71—143. Smith is an Internal Revenue worker at the Capitol and Clines is with the WPB. They will play for the title Sunday over the 36-hole route.

Both Miss Chances

Both had chances on the thirty-sixth green for easy birdies and what would have meant the title, but both chipped poorly and missed 4-foot putts for fours. McKimmie, who was tied with Smith with two holes to play, barely missed his birdie putt for what would have been a three-way tie.

Due to the many pickups few teams had completed four-man totals. In Class A, four naval officers, Lieut. Ralph S. Fowler, Lieuts. (j. g.) Don McPhail and K. M. Skaggs, Ensign L. J. Noah put together a 628 total for low gross and the Mellon Trophy, McPhail leading his team with a pair of 75's for 150.

General Accounting Office teams won net in both Classes A and B and Veterans' Administration won low gross in Class B.

Low net winner in A was the first day's leader, Johnny Attas of the Navy with 149, 8—141. Low gross scorer in Class B was Joe Barkovich, Coast Guard, with 85, 81—166, while net was a tie between George Houff, Veterans' Administration, and Mike Daly, Coast Guard.

Leone Tests Sharkey at Arena Tonight

Washington's roughest wrestling match since Chief White Feather and Tiger Nelson grappled at the Old Auditorium some years ago is expected tonight at Turner's Arena when Babe Sharkey, gargantuan Texan, collides with the Boston villain, Michele Loine.

Flying fists and kicking feet are due to be mixed in with some good, hard wrestling as the two behemoths battle it out in the one-fall-to-a-finish bout—second chapter in a feud that started unceremoniously last week just after the Original Angel won from Sharkey.

The semiwindup promises to pack a lot of interest. It will bring together The Mask(?), latest of the hooded scourges, and Dick Lever, of Salt Lake City.

In a special two-man team match Dr. John Bonika, the mat medico, and Tony Martinelli, will engage Angelo Savoldi and Chief Bamba Tabu.

Cardinals' White Out Indefinitely

St. Louis, July 13 (AP).—Cardinal Southpaw Ernie White, who returned to St. Louis from Boston to have his ailing arm examined, has bursitis in his left shoulder, the club's surgeon Dr. Robert F. Hyland disclosed today.

Dr. Hyland said an X-ray of White's shoulder revealed the condition and that he would be out of service indefinitely.

Selections at Hagerstown

Dear Al:

Just what the horsemen, jockeys and other persons who make their living normally around the half-mile tracks of Maryland will do after this track closes on Saturday, I do not know. It is a fact that few of those still around are fit for other employment. It seems a shame that with the sport going along here in top gear, the end has come so early in the season. I don't know if the Hagerstown management wants an extension of the meeting, but the Maryland Racing Commission and the Legislature should step in and order one. Hagerstown offered its track, practically gratis, to Cumberland for a meeting and the west State association apparently has declined. There are some rumors that Marlboro or Bel Air might ask to run for two weeks here. One thing is certain, Maryland owes a little to the horsemen who have kept the half-milers going through the years. If some way can be arranged to keep Hagerstown open for another two weeks or so, the State, which profits handsomely from racing, would be giving a lift to the horsemen who would have nothing to look forward to except the fall meet at Pimlico, where the book probably will be too high to give their brand of horses a chance. Some of the larger stables hereabouts will head for the Middle West, but that will be too expensive for most owners. There seems to be little or no chance of a change in transportation problems this summer. That means Cumberland, Bel Air and Marlboro will remain idle and Timonium, of course, was erased when the Army took over that plant. Somebody show this to Brother Small, Mr. Big of the racing commission, and see if we can't have, say, 20 more racing days at Hagerstown. BILL.

First race—CHAT HOPKINS appears suited at this distance and I'm going to string along. ALSELEDA will be right there if taken off the reserve list. CHARMFUL is fit and dangerous.

Second race—DRESS ROCK has plenty of speed and may emerge from the maiden ranks in this. LIGHT VALE has the rail and is a threat. FOX MEADOW is a possibility.

Third race—LENA GIRL was virtually left at the post last week. Will be hard to beat with racing luck. GRADATIM is fast and will be right there. ROYAL FLEET for the show end.

Fourth race—PAVILLION may lead all the way in this company. FAIR FLAME is fit and belongs close. TINTO to take care of the others.

Fifth race—STREAMER is suited by this route and I see no reason for mistakes. NYLEVE belongs with these, but has been hard used of late. SAMPLER for the minor award.

Sixth race—FREE TRADER has the stretch punch of this gang and may use it to take the chief award. J. HAL and W. H. KELLY for the place and show.

Seventh race—WAR ART likes this track and could take it all in this distance test. IDLE NIGHT and YANKEE LAD for the place and show.

Eighth race—JAMES PAL is getting ready to take a race of this kind and I'm going to string along. ROUGH AMOS and STAND ALONE for the other money awards.

Best bet—FREE TRADER.

"I am the wrath of many men....I am the hope of all"

"My name is Wright Cyclone. My job just now is war.

"In every single pound of me is more power than in all the straining sinews of a work horse.

"Hours ago my steels and my aluminum were ore in the earth, my magnesium was mingled with the salt in the sea. Hours from now you will see me, speeding more and ever more bombers to enemy targets all over the world. In 42 different types of my country's planes you find me today.*

"I am the result of 84 thousand separate and intricate manufacturing operations. I am judged and tested by 55 thousand individual inspections . . . some to aceuracies as fine as 4 millionths of an inch. And the materials that go into my creation are the product of the skills and the toil of many thousands of men and women in every part of America.

"More than a score of engineering sciences have contributed to my creation. In my cylinders 15-ton explosions create power at the rate of 16,800 blasts every minute — 280 every second during the two million miles of flight that is my life expectancy.

"In the years of peace, my reliability and power were developed and proved through more than one billion plane miles of commercial airline service.

"My name is Wright Cyclone. I am the wrath of many men, and my job just now is war. . . . but I carry hope, besides."

* * * *

Yes, hope! For this is power to help the world. Today, bringing Victory closer, American men and materials are flying in a matter of hours to the farthest corners of the earth . . . millions of tons of military cargoes are being moved through the sky...nearly 100,000 miles of new air routes have been opened in the past two years alone.

Wright Cyclone engines helped to make that possible . . . just as they will help to make the last day of this war the first in a great new age of air trade and transportation to come . . . LOOK TO THE SKY, AMERICA!

But Navy employes won't monopolize Pierre's services as much as they'd like to. Pierre was hired as an adviser to Capt. F. W. Hoover, general manager of the Welfare and Recreational Association, on food preparation and he'll teach his secrets to the chief cooks in all Government cafeterias.

Pierre has spent a few days in the War Department cafeteria but he plans to make his headquarters at the Navy cafeteria and Captain Hoover said chief cooks from other cafeterias will be transferred to the Navy cafeteria to work under Pierre's supervision.

Moreover, Pierre will get all the cafeteria operators together from time to time to teach them more economical ways to prepare food. He doesn't believe that men can cook better than women but he does believe that women don't make the most of their cooking opportunities.

The South, he believes, has the best recipes and many of his have been taken from Southern cooking and he has added his own perfections. "In the South," he said, "people know how to eat and they enjoy it."

PAY DAY

Sorry, but it now appears that few Federal agencies will be paid today. Only a few hundred checks were released yesterday and many an employe went home disappointed. And most of them will return home empty-handed today as the mechanics of releasing the huge backlog of pay checks is a bit complicated. Hundreds of vouchers were piled up yesterday on the General Accounting Office and from GAO they must go back to the Treasury, to the individual agencies and then to the Disbursements Office before the checks can be released. Officials say they are speeding up the process as fast as they know how but the rigamarole must be gone through.

The Credit Union at Smithsonian Institution has done its good deed for the year. It borrowed money to pay the salaries last weekend of 100 hard-pressed employes of the Zoo. The Zoo employes hadn't been paid in nearly a month. The fact is that they could have been paid—along with all other District government employes — through June 30 if the District Commissioners hadn't been napping . . . The Maritime Commission today will choose one of its stenographers who has been in the organization for more than a year to christen a Liberty Ship. The name of the lucky secretary will be selected from a hat today at 10:30 by Admiral Land, chairman of the commission.

5-Man Group To Probe D.C. Water Office

Commissioners Name Committee As Outgrowth of Warren Charges

By Elwin Stouffer
Post Staff Writer

A five-man investigating committee headed by Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech was appointed yesterday by the District Commissioners to conduct an investigation of the "accounts, records and administrative practices of the Office of Water Registrar of the District of Columbia."

Result of Warren Charges

The investigation is a result of charges made last April by Lindsay C. Warren, Comptroller General of the United States, who alleged that the affairs of the water department were far from satisfactory and that hundreds of thousands of dollars had been lost as the result of holding only occupants of premises, and not the owners, responsible for water bills.

He also charged, in his report to the Commissioners, that revenue had been lost in delayed billings, by charging of improper rates, cancellations and adjustments of accounts receivable and failure to bill all accounts which should have been billed.

He attributed these conditions to "the lack of foresight and planning, poor management, inadequate supervision, faulty system, lack of systematic and orderly procedures and inefficient and dissatisfied employes."

First Meeting Soon

Keech said yesterday that he had not had time to study the matter of the investigation but that he would call the members of the committee together not later than the first of next week. He said the purpose of the invesigation would be to go into the charges made by the Comproller General.

A subcommittee of the Senate District Committee has been investigating the District Water Department for many months. The investigation began when a proposed increase of 151 per cent was made in the 1942 budget estimate. The increase was not granted.

After the Warren report was made public the Commissioners requested a report from Humphrey Beckett, water superintendent. The Warren report recommended the appointment of a new registrar at a salary of $4600 a year and the Senate approved the recommendation. The position has not yet been filled.

New Police Band Wins Status Of Official District Unit

BENTER CONGRATULATED—The new police band was presented to the District Commissioners yesterday as it played in front of the District Building. Lieut. Charles Benter, U. S. N., retired, conductor of the band (center), is congratulated by Commissioner J. Russell Young (right) as Maj. Edward J. Kelly, superintendent of police, looks on

The Metropolitan Police Department now has a band, and with the official blessing of the city fathers.

Yesterday afternoon Maj. Edward J. Kelly, police chief, brought his 36 musical policemen with their conductor, Lieut. Charles Benter, U. S. N. (retired) to the E Street entrance of the District Building, and officially presented the contingent to the District Commissioners.

Official Division

In turn, Commissioner John Russell Young made the band an official division of the Metropolitan Police Department. He lauded Lieutenant Benter's efforts in forming the band and thanked the members for the many hours of rehearsal they had contributed on their own time.

Lieutenant Benter, who for 20 years was conductor of the United States Navy Band, then led his musicians in a very commendable rendition of "Anchors Aweigh." Several other military numbers followed, the occasion ending with the National Anthem.

The blare of the woods and brasses caused quite an audience to congregate in Post Square, considering the fact the concert was unheralded.

Young's Idea

The idea of the band was conceived by Commissioner Young several months ago. He enlisted the aid of Lieutenant Benter who agreed to serve in a voluntary capacity.

The problem of financing the purchase of musical instruments was solved by John Hillyard, a member of the Public Order Commitee of the Board of Trade, who formed a citizens' committee and raised funds for the financing of the venture.

Besides Commissioner Young, others present at the ceremonies yesterday were Commissioners Guy Mason and Col. Charles W. Kutz, Granville Gude, president of the Board of Trade; Hillyard, Clarence Arata, executive secretary of the Board of Trade, and Inspector Harvey G. Callahan.

Insanitary Restaurants Blacklisted

Quarter of Eating Places, Mostly Small, Affected By Health Order

By Roger Young
Post Staff Writer

Nearly a quarter of Washington's restaurants have been blacklisted by the Health Department for persistent violations of the District's sanitary regulations, Dr. Reed Ashworth, director of food inspections, announced last night.

A "clean up or close up" campaign, designed to make the offenders either put their premises in order or go broke through paying fines which have been costing these proprietors some $2000 a month in the last few months, Ashworth said.

It was pointed out that most of the offenders are small lunchrooms and restaurants widely scattered throughout the city. Many of them, it was said, are "cheap joints," both Negro and white.

Ten to 20 Cases a Week

"There have been 10 to 20 cases a week on which we have got convictions in court," Ashworth said. "Usually the same violators turn up time and time again.

In spite of this high percentage of violators, Ashworth is convinced that the over-all picture of Washington restaurant sanitation is satisfactory, with 76 per cent of the operators being known as good compliers.

Of the 24 per cent which do not have clean bills of health some do come into line after one conviction. Others seem to prefer repeated visits to court and increasing fines, to running clean establishments. It is this minority which the Health Department has entered on its blacklist.

The principal difficulty restaurants have in meeting Health Department standards is in getting dishes washed. Robert Wilson, executive secretary of the Washington Restaurant Association said that every day there are at least 10 restaurants reporting their dishwashers didn't show up.

In addition, the large restaurants with elaborate dishwashing machines are constantly faced with the problem of having the machines break down, and then of finding repair service unavailable, or broken parts irreplaceable.

Fewer Food Poison Cases

In spite of these difficulties, and of the blacklist, Ashworth pointed out that, with the spectacular exception of the food poisoning of circus help last month, general food poisoning cases have been fewer this year than during preceding years.

He said that undoubtedly the unrelenting campaign of prosecutions his inspectors have waged has contributed to this safety record. Another factor that might enter into it, he said, was that restaurant operators are of necessity scrupulous about conserving what food they get—and that it is usually obtained in such small quantities that there is little chance of any of it lying around long enough to spoil.

Health Officer George C. Ruhland agreed with Ashworth that the food inspectors' staff is now adequate to protect the health of even an overcrowded Washington in this respect. There are now 48 inspectors, with some positions authorized but not yet filled.

In addition to restaurant supervision, the food inspection service has the responsibility of insuring safe milk for the city from the city's broad milk-shed, and, surprisingly, through its veterinarian service, of checking the current rabies epidemic.

That $3.50 D. C. Dinner May Be on Paper Plate

The possibility of eating that $3.50 dinner at Washington's swankiest resturants off plebeian paper plates is not too remote, Health Officer George C. Ruhland revealed last night. Whatever pain it might cause Emily Post, the fact is that the problem of washing china and glassware on a large scale is becoming more and more acute and Dr. Ruhland is planning to ask the War Production Board to release a large number of paper plates and cups—and even of paper knives and forks—to Washington restaurants.

Railey Baby's Death Cause 'Undetermined'

The death of Stanley Railey, jr., 16 months old, who succumbed in his aunt's arms on the way to Gallinger Hospital Monday after another District hospital had pronounced the infant's condition "not serious," was traced to undetermined causes" in a temporary death certificate issued by Drs. A. Magruder MacDonald and James I. Boyd, District and Prince Georges County coroners, yesterday.

A laboratory examination of vital organs, now under way, is expected to determine whether the baby's death was caused by poisoned dog food, as the child's parents suspect.

The infant was taken to Providence Hospital by the father and mother, Sunday afternoon. They were told to take the baby to Children's Hospital, since the children's ward at Providence was filled.

It was learned from Dudley Taylor, secretary of the volunteer fire department of Bladensburg, that the department's ambulance was out on two calls when Mrs. Sullivan, Stanley's aunt, called for assistance. Taylor said he transmitted the call to the Washington dispatcher, whose records show a call for Bladensburg rescue squad No. 3 was sent over the police radio at 12:39 p. m. and repeated at 12:47.

Capitol Heights control center, it was learned, kept Mrs. Sullivan informed. When the ambulance was responding, which, according to the Capitol Heights dispatcher, was about 10 minutes after the first call, the dispatcher was told by a woman who answered the phone that the baby had already been taken away in a private car. He thereupon canceled the call.

According to Gallinger Hospital records, Stanley Railey was pronounced dead at 1:10 p. m. A ride from the Railey home at 1203 Fifty-fourth Avenue, Hillside, Md., to Gallinger Hospital is estimated to take 10 to 15 minutes.

Mrs. Sullivan was said to have called the Hyattsville ambulance service in vain. Murray Gover, mayor, said yesterday that the town has two ambulance services.

Postlude

Big Audience Hears Salzedo Ensemble

C. C. Cappel, in cooperation with the National Capital Park Service and under the sponsorship of The Washington Post, presents the Salzedo Concert Ensemble (Carlos Salzedo and Marjorie Call Salzedo, harps; Ruth Freeman, flute; Janos Scholz, violoncello) on Tuesday night in Meridian Hill Park. Program of compositions by Handel, Rameau, Debussy, Mendelssohn, Faure, Francoeur, Ravel, Gluck, Leclair, Ganne, Debussy and Salzedo.

A goodly audience disregarded the fickleness of last night's weather to attend the twice postponed "first" concert of the Salzedo Concert Ensemble in Meridian Hill Park.

Adhering again to their ensemble and solo program pattern, the group opened with a Handel suite arranged for flute, violoncello and two harps, very much in the stately dance manner of all eighteenth century suites when, as art and historians tell us, life was a game of ornamentation, ostentation and gold dust.

The suite was followed by a group of selections arranged for two harps—La Gaillarde by Rameau, played with brittle color, Debussy's Clair de Sune which did not stand up so well under transcription and Mendelssohn's Spinning Wheel.

Janos Scholz, who had but recently played in recital at Meridian Hill, replaced Ana Drittell, the ensemble's regular violoncellist, who could not appear because of illness. As in the first concert, Mr. Scholz's repertoire stood him well, and the program remained as printed. He played Faure's beautiful Elegie with sensitivity and fine coloring and gave a spirited reading of Francoeur's Adagio and Alegro.

Marjorie Call Salzedo played Ravel's Introduction and Allegro brilliantly demonstrating the harp as an instrument of far greater power than its romantic associations have credited it with being.

Ruth Freeman, who possesses fine breath control and can give endless variation to her tonal tints, played the Minuet and Air from Gluck's opera Orfio and Euredice, Leclair's Musette and Ganne's Andante and Scherzo.

The ensemble closed the program with Mr. Salzedo's transcription of Debussy's Children's Corner and an encore Minuet, by Balensin.

Solo and duo encores were Salzedo's Night Breeze, played by both Salzedos, Saent-Saen's The Swan, played by Janos Scholz, a French folk song, played by Marjorie Call Salzedo, a Godard Waltz, played by Ruth Freeman, Turkey in the Straw, and Behind the Box, played by Salzedo.

20 Churches Act to Curb Delinquency

By Robert Tate Allan
Post Church Editor

Alarmed at rising crime and juvenile delinquency in Washington, church groups have taken practical steps toward curbing it.

Protestant congregations of the Columbia Heights and Mount Pleasant area will cooperate in recreational nights for "teen-agers" beginning Monday night.

Representatives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Metropolitan Police, churches, schools and citizens associations met last night at Albright Memorial Evangelical Church, Fourth and Rittenhouse Streets Northwest, to "let their hair down" on the delinquency problem.

That lack of parental discipline is largely to blame for the current rise in juvenile delinquency was the gist of a panel discussion sponsored by the Men's Brotherhood of the Church.

All Aspects Discussed

National, city, community and religious aspects of the problem were discussed respectively, by Milton A. Jones, FBI; Paul Phillips, Juvenile Court probation officer; Lieut. Charles Dwyer of the Sixth Precinct, and the Rev. George E. Schnabel, pastor of Albright Church, situated in the Sixth Precinct. Frank Binks was moderator, and A. B. Lowstuter, Brotherhood president, presided.

Jones cited statistics indicating a 55.7 increase in juvenile delinquency in 1942 over 1941, and urged that we "tighten up our homes all along the line." Schnabel scored "competitive foolishness" among churches, warned that thousands of dollars worth of church property that could be utilized for youth-building purposes is not being used, and said that only through cooperative Christianity can juvenile delinquency be curbed.

20 Churches Cooperate

Twenty churches will cooperate in the Columbia Heights-Mount Pleasant project, but the programs will be centered at six churches best equipped for recreation. The idea, originated by Miss Bess Miles, director of religious education at Calvary Methodist Church, calls for community recreational programs, Mondays through Fridays, from 8 to 10 p. m., the following churches alternating:

Mondays, Columbia Heights Christian Church, 1410 Columbia Road Northwest; Tuesdays, First Reformed Church, Eleventh and Monroe Streets Northwest; Wednesdays, Central Presbyterian Church, Fifteenth and Irving Streets Northwest; Thursdays, Church of Latter-Day Saints, Sixteenth Street and Columbia Road Northwest; Fridays, National Baptist Memorial Church, Sixteenth Street and Columbia Road Northwest, and Saturdays, All Souls Unitarian Church, Sixteenth and Harvard Streets Northwest.

Strikers Back At Bethesda Laundry Jobs

Women laundry workers at the Blue Ribbon Laundry, 4712 Hampden Lane, Bethesda, returned to work yesterday, finally convinced by a Department of Labor conciliator that the mysterious 20 per cent missing from their pay checks went to Uncle Sam, not the owner of the plant.

The women stopped work Monday when, under the laundry's first payday for deduction of pay-as-you-go income taxes, they found the money gone and immediately blamed the owner, Samuel F. Boorstein.

"They apparently had never heard of pay-as-you-go—they just wanted their money," Boorstein sighed. "They thought we were trying to put something over on them."

L. J. Smith, commissioner of conciliation, and Miss M. E. Howard, War Manpower Commission-United States Employment Service representative at Silver Spring, answered Boorstein's emergency call for help and were able to convince the workers that the procedure was entirely legal.

Boorstein told them he had applied for Government approval of general wage increases, which must be held up until District Office of Price Administration officials give assurance they will approve price increases to customers to meet the additional costs.

Mary E. Bradford Funeral Today

Funeral services for Mrs. Mary Ellen Bradford, 74, wife of Harold L. Bradford, who died at her home in Colesville, Md., Monday, will be held at 2:30 p. m. today at the home. The Rev. William Firth, pastor of the Colesville Methodist Church, and the Rev. Paul Groseclose of Solomons Island, formerly pastor of the Colesville Church, will conduct the services and burial will be in the church cemetery.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Bradford is survived by a brother, Clarence Owings of Richmond, Va., formerly of Baltimore. She was a native of Howard County and had lived at Colesville 39 years. She was long active in the work of the Colesville Methodist Church.

Huberman to Play In Place of Roth Quartet Tonight

Word has been received that the Roth Quartet, which was scheduled to play tonight in Meridian Hill Park on the Starlight Chamber Music Series, has been obliged to cancel the engagement. C. C. Cappel feels very fortunate in having been able to secure as a substitute the eminent violinist, Bronislav Huberman, who will play the Casar Franck sonata, a sonata by Handel, pieces by Smetana, Brahms and Szymanovski, and several of his own Chopin transscriptions.

Huberman appeared last Sunday as soloist with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony in Lewishon Stadium, and received a great ovation from an audience of approximately 14,000.

Hundreds Evicted Under Zone Rulings

Complaints that orders of the Board of Zoning Adjustment are causing hundreds of evictions from spacious, healthful rooms in the restricted A residential districts are flooding the House District Committee, it was disclosed yesterday.

Operation of a commercial rooming house in a restricted residential zone is prohibited under zoning regulations here, but for many years a number of persons owning large old-fashioned homes were in technical violation of that regulation without any action being taken.

Adoption of rooming house regulations and the necessity of seeking a license have brought to light a number of these violations, and landlords are being compelled to evict from 5 to 10 tenants, right at a time when the most acute housing shortage exists.

Copies of rulings of the zoning board in the files of the District Committee contain positive statements by the boards that these houses from which tenants must be evicted are not in violation of health regulations. Many of them are fine brick homes with one bath to every three bedrooms at least, but under existing regulations their occupancy by many tenants is a violation of rules set up to prevent deterioration of residential areas.

Because of the war situation the zoning board is permitting a maximum of nine tenants in most of these houses, but that often means evicting 10 or 11 other residents.

Judges to Tour Play-Yards for Contest Check

Judges of the home play-yard contest will make final inspection tours today to select the 10 best home playgrounds in the District. Twenty-three of 230 originally entered in the contest when judging began July 1, still are in the running, Mrs. Clarice Smith of the Recreation Department announced last night.

Coroner's Finding of Murder Ends Probe of Sidley Death

Certificates of murder and suicide were issued by Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald yesterday in the deaths of Rosemary Sidley, 31, Government stenographer, and William Knox Chandler, 42 the woman's supervisor and the father of two children.

The coroner's action closed the investigation and came about after police questioned the dead man's wife, Mrs. Margaret Colston Chandler, and Miss Sidley's roommate, Elizabeth Maguire, 1219 Thirty-fifth Street Northwest.

He did, however, detectives ascertained, tell his 9-year-old son that he was "going on a trip." He carried a weekend bag, it was said. Another son, 4, was in bed.

Investigators discovered that Chandler had four extra cartridges to fit a .32-caliber automatic pistol he clutched in his hand in his coat pocket. Another gun was found in an automobile parked in front of the home. The car had been borrowed by Chandler from a friend.

Detective Sergt. David Ennis found two letters from Chandler in Miss Sidley's belongings. They protested his love for her and pleaded with her to be his friend, he said. From the context it was indicated Miss Sidley apparently spruned his advances.

Mrs. Chandler told police she came here from Nashville, Tenn., about two months ago and that her husband had been in Washington since September of last year.

It was a belated pay day yesterday for 7505 District employes, who had to wait until the urgent deficiency bill was signed Monday, before they could get their pay checks which, in some cases, were overdue as long as six weeks.

District Auditor A. Ray Pilkerton said that a total of $1,216,148 was paid out yesterday. Of this sum, he said, $40,242 was in cash repreesnting payment of the executive branches and the balance in checks.

Those who apparently suffered the worst were the District's 3500 schoolteachers, who had not been paid since June 2. A large number of District employes, Pilkerton said, had received advances on their pay.

All but 36 firemen had received their pay on schedule, but it was pay day for 396 policemen. Most of the low-salary bracket employes of District institutions had received advances on their pay, it was said.

Those categories receiving pay checks yesterday included: Police and Fire Departments; custodial, institutional, library, recreation and executive employes.

Dr. Goldsborough Is Dead; Former Md. State Senator

Princeton, N. J., July 13 (AP).—Dr. William Winder Goldsborough, former Maryland State Senator, died today at Tenacre Foundation Sanatorium.

A brother, Judge T. Alan Goldsborough of the United States District Court at Washington accompanied the body to Dr. Goldsborough's home in Greensboro, Md., where it will be taken to the Rawlings funeral home.

Dr. Goldsborough was a graduate of the University of Maryland Medical School, and practiced medicine in Greensboro for most of his adult life.

Funeral Today For W. L. Stream

Funeral services for William Leonard Stream, 83, who died Monday at the home of his son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. W. Raymond Stream, near Potomac, Md., will be held this morning in Mt. Pleasant Methodist Church, Taylorstown, Va. Burial will be in the church cemetery.

Mr. Stream was a native of Virginia and had been a resident of Montgomery and Frederick Counties, Md., about 30 years. He is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Lucy Ricketts of Rockville, and two sons, Robert Stream of Washington, and W. Raymond Stream. He also leaves three grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Tuberculosis Unit Picks Funkhouser As Secretary

Appointment of Edward K. Funkhouser as executive secretary of the District Tuberculosis Association was announced yesterday by Paul D. Sleeper, president.

Funkhouser, who has been executive secretary of the Passaic County, New Jersey Tuberculosis and Health Association for 18 years, will arrive here Friday to take over his new position for which he had been recommended by the executive committee, Sleeper stated.

City News in Brief

Private dealers in used washing machines, refrigerators, vacuum cleaners and typewriters were warned yesterday by the District Office of Price Administration that they face heavy fines if they violate ceiling prices on those commodities.

Officials declared that they have received many complaints from purchasers of such household equipment, and pointed out that complainants may be awarded triple damages should they desire to press beyond simple restitution of the excess price charged.

The Masquers of the D. C. Recreation Department will present a three-act comedy, "Rollo's Wild Oat," this evening at Roosevelt High School, Thirteenth and Upshur Streets Northwest, at 8:15.

Leading roles will be taken by John Salling and Marion Sitkiewicz with Pauline Oak directing.

Mrs. Richard Field a Leader In War to End Isolationism

By Genevieve Reynolds

She's one of the ringleaders in a great whispering campaign. If necessary, she will stump from hamlet to city. Alert, intellectual Mrs. Richard A. Field of Weston, Mass., second vice president of the National League of Women Voters, is serious about stamping out all traces of isolationism.

GENEVIEVE REYNOLDS

Working on the theory that word of mouth can reach those persons indifferent to lectures on international cooperation in the postwar world, she's determined that the milkman, merchant, maid, housewife, clerk, as well as college professors, will understand the fallacy of isolationism.

"While surveys and polls indicate that 70 per cent of the people now are in favor of international cooperation," she said, "a variety of isolationist signs crop up from time to time. And unless the people have enough ground under their feet, they will be swept away by war weariness into postwar isolationism."

MRS. RICHARD A. FIELD

Many people have the idea that anything international hurts this country; still another misconception is that internationalists are unpatriotic, according to Mrs. Field.

Purpose of the whole campaign being launched by the National League of Women Voters is to awaken in the people a sense of responsibility about international affairs.

"Yes, it's true that many groups are thinking and planning for the postwar era," explained Mrs. Field. "Still there is a vast, untouched field. The people being reached now are those who already are interested in the subject . . . not those who are indifferent, or possess no facts."

It's the individual's awareness of a sense of responsibility toward government that concerns Mrs. Field most. She believes that as a country we forget the significance of unchallenged and unorganized thought; we are much too accustomed to thinking in terms of pressure groups, blocs and organizations. In short, people in the United States are too prone to group thinking, which ends up with the mass following one leader's opinion.

"To progress, the individual must be willing to think and to express an opinion," asserted Mrs. Field. "Responsibility toward government is more than writing letters to Congressmen.

"People don't need to have all the answers to have an opinion and to be called a responsible citizen," she continued. "An understanding of basic points plus common sense will take you a long way."

In town to attend the board meeting of the National League of Women Voters, Mrs. Field met with the local league to assist in mapping out a campaign to inform the people of this country of the necessity of the Government's participation and cooperation in international affairs. The D. C. League is the first local organization to discuss with the national board members the plans of the National League to mobilize 50,000 women throughout the Nation to a sense of individual responsibility for such public opinion as will lead to a better world after the war. The conference was an all day meeting held at the home of Mrs. Oscar Chapman.

But more about Mrs. Field. A native of Minneapolis, she was Caroline Crosby, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Crosby—the milling family. She prepared for college at Northrop Collegiate School and was graduated from Bryn Wawr in 1938. Then she studied one winter at the University of Vienna, returning to marry Richard H. Field, a Boston attorney, now New England regional counsel for the Office of Price Administration.

Soon after going to Boston, Mrs. Field joined the League of Women Voters and soon was asked to take direction of the department of government and international cooperation. Later she served as president of the State League and was campaign chairman of Greater Boston in the League's expansion campaign.

Mrs. John L. Whitehurst, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, arrived in England Monday. Mrs. Whitehurst is a guest of the British government and will make a study of women's activities in the United Kingdom. She will particularly ascertain the progress made in agriculture, industry, nursing and volunteer services, and will note what the British have done to solve the problem of juvenile delinquency, food rationing, communal feeding and nursery schools.

The Jumper Dress

By Ruth Gregory

Like this dress? If you don't you're going to be out of luck. Because this trim wonder is FASHION, 1943 variety.

The two-piece jumper dress will be seen this year in many another fabric, with many another trim. Dame Fashion, sometimes freakish, sometimes inspired, always unexpected, has pulled a fast one this time. She reached down in her bag and pulled out . . . what? If you're faintly nostalgic looking at the dress sketched, you'll maybe know the answer. But don't confess the nostalgia—it might date you, vintage '26.

Remember now? The waist is higher than those awful dropped-down things in the twenties (the old Dame usually does improve on her revivals), but the general simplicity of line, the uncluttered look, the narrowness, are still the same.

It looks so right in this present world . . . the kind of a dress that puts the flounced and furbelowed to shame. The little basic black dress, much maligned but still a pretty important item in anyone's wardrobe, will have to move over to make a place for this streamlined sister. If there's one thing wrong with this dress, it's that you'll want to wear it so much, you can get tired of it. But that's easily remedied with an accessory change—and this is one dress that permits variety of same.

This particular dress can make its bow right now . . . no need to wait for fall. Although the material looks like wool, it's one of those fabric-makers' miracles, a finely woven rayon crepe. It comes in beige, cerise, or emerald green and the flat buttons and the belt are of genuine alligator. About $45.

Playing free with an couplet, I say,

"Thank you, Dame, for simple clothes again

The Stay at Homes

"ARE you staying in town all summer?"

"Absolutely! John and I both feel it's definitely unpatriotic to travel."

"That's what Bill says. He doesn't believe in vacations—at a time like this."

"Well, now, since we're both stay-at-homes, we ought to see a lot of each other this summer."

"Yes, we must. I'll call you up just as soon as I get back."

"Back?"

"Yes, Bill has to run out to Chicago—some kind of a conference."

"You probably won't be gone long?"

"A fishing trip?"

"Oh no! Bill's just going to meet some men up there—some kind of a conference. Now after we get back——"

"I may be out of town then. John has to run up to New York—some kind of a conference, and since the children are at camp and there's nobody to cook for and since his sister out on Long Island's been wanting us to visit her, I thought I ought to go along."

"I want to run up to New York as soon as I get back—on business, of course. I want to do some shopping."

"Well, anyway, going to New York isn't really travel."

"No it's really more like—well, commuting."

"NOW then when we both get back from New York we'll help each other pass the summer."

"Absolutely! I'm going to be stuck here the whole time except maybe for running down to Crawdad Beach for a week or so. You know my sister's spending the summer there. Her husband's overseas and I really feel it's my duty to run down and cheer her up."

"Oh, well, visiting relatives isn't vacationing. I'm going to have to run up to Saratoga to see my Aunt Emily some time in August."

"Say, Bill was saying something about having to go there sometime next month—some kind of a business conference!"

"WELL now, as soon as we both settle down here again we must plan some things to pass the summer?"

"Absolutely! It's going to seem like an eternity—just staying home."

"Well, of course, I'm going to break it a little with a couple of house parties. The Lukers have asked me out to Hurly Burly and the Swaggs to Gilded Acres."

"Marvelous! I'm going to a house party up in the Blue Ridge—you know the Lollers—and then, of course, Bill may have to go to Atlantic City for some kind of a conference in September."

"Well, I guess we'll manage to get through some way to October."

"Yes, we'll have to. After all, this is war. But I can tell you this much—just as soon as it's all over there's one thing I'm going to have. A real trip!"

"So am I!"

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

Every parent should realize different backgrounds, different parental influences, differences in sex and personal experiences will create ideas and opinions which mirror those differences.

It is inexcusable for two individuals mature enough to have children to be unable or unwilling to both recognize and adjust those differences.

The mother of two says her husband is unreasonable about her management of their 18-month-old boy. "The boy is incorrigible," she writes. "If he is inside he wants to be out and vice versa. He can't play with his toys for 5 minutes but he can spend time tearing up a new flower bed or play with dishes on the pantry shelves."

"I feel his training is at fault. His daddy says it isn't. I feel he should be in a playpen or fenced-in yard. Hubby will not consent. I think he should be weaned from the bottle. Hubby says as long as he takes it only at bedtime he won't have him crying for it. You can well imagine my situation. He won't discuss anything with me. I feel someone should deal firmly with the boy. But how can I when his father won't let me?"

I wondered as I read if, in all your relationships with your husband, you allow him to browbeat you so. You have the chief care of this child and therefore the decisions of management are yours. If, when the father takes care of him, he wants to be such a Mr. Milquetoast with the boy, then there isn't much you can do. The boy will run all over him, but he won't with you. Not if you show him he has to conform to some rules and regulations.

It reflects poorly on a child to be drinking milk from a bottle when he is long past the age of infancy. Reduce the amount in the bottle nightly until there is no more. Then break the bottle (old stuff but still good) and let him see you do it. Then there won't be any more bottles. Give him a toy animal or two to take to bed with him.

He needs a playpen and a fenced-in yard. What human being can keep her sanity and run after an active child all day, keeping him out of mischief and danger? Leave hubby with the child for a week and he'll see the light. So long as you do the running he'll continue to be blind to your needs.

Let the boy play with the dishes in the pantry, all children love that, but transfer his affection for dirt to a large sandpile where he can do his own planting and digging up, harmlessly. Your husband is simply unrealistic. He doesn't know either a child's needs or the way to cut down the number of situations demanding discipline so one can handle them justly.

Our leaflets, "Early Discipline," and "How to Manage the Child Wisely," give a picture of these early disciplinary situations. They may be had, by sending a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred in care of this newspaper.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Plunged in Remorse Following Brief Infidelity To Dearly Loved Husband, Now in the Army, Wife Asks If She Should Confess to Him, to End Deceit?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am deeply in love with my husband and he is with me. Harmony and affection are a commonplace with us, although they have never become a meaningless habit. But ever since we have been married, there has been a problem of sexual maladjustment,—because we got off to a bad start, psychologically. He tends to be physically frail and is not of an ardent temperament, whereas I am just the opposite. Almost from the beginning of marriage, I had a feeling of emotional frustration, and gradually an "ego conflict" developed. I wondered what was wrong with me; while he, sensitive always, blamed himself for being an inadequate lover.

We tried facing the problem by talking it over; but this only solidified the maladjustment. Then we ignored the situation, because after all, it did not spoil our very happy and affectionate comradeship. The real complication arose when I met another man, who appeared to be the perfect specimen. He and I were strongly attracted to each other. I tried to fight the attraction,—but succeeded only in losing sleep, weight and perspective. My husband could see the situation, and although he was deeply hurt, he could understand it. He was perfect in his behavior,—neither too severe nor too lenient with me. However, we were both miserable; and I vowed to him I would never dishonor him.

Deceitful Dealing Foreign to Them

Then my husband had to leave for the Army. I was frantic and heart-broken,—at the loss of his companionship, and also at having him go at a time when emotional conflict seemed to be tearing me to pieces. I lapsed into a sort of numbness, when everything seemed unreal and nothing and no one mattered. But beneath that numbness, I knew there was basic steadiness,—a steadiness that had reference to my husband's and my true love for each other. It was during this period of bleak unreality that the other man won out. The affair was very brief, for he, too, went into the Army. It was also disillusioning. . . . For a while, I was too numb to hold any viewpoint toward my transgression; but gradually the enormity of my foolishness dawned on me.

That is the background, and this is the problem: My husband does not know I broke my vow. Deception of any sort has had no place in our relationship. It would become unrecognizable as our relationship if deception should enter in. Besides that, I have no taste or aptitude for deceit. On the other hand, I wonder if confession would not be self-indulgence on my part. I feel sure of forgiveness, so that I do not hesitate out of fear. But no matter how freely he forgave me, I shall never forgive myself,—and that seems just penalty to me.

The question is: Which is the greater kindness to him,—(1) to tell him, and claim the poor consolation of knowing there are not, and never will be, any secrets between us? Or (2) hold my peace and school myself to see that no word or hint of my sin shall ever hurt him? This would be almost a temperamental impossibility to me; but if it ought to be done, it is up to me to do it. I rather think the first choice is the best; but I am so suspicious of myself now that I want your opinion. S. B. M.

Morbid Confession Would Add to Injury

DEAR S. B. M.: As a matter of simple decency and plain good taste, you should not stain and befoul your essentially fine relationship with your husband by pouring into his ear the poison phial confession of your nasty little affair with the other man. As you surmise, it is an unworthy impulse toward self-indulgence,—on a par with the impulses that made you ready victim of the "affair,"—which causes you to favor "telling all." You do, of course, go on to argue that, heretofore, "deception of any sort has had no place in our relationship;" and whimper, wistfully, that it would become unrecognizable as our relationship if deception should enter in."

Well, deception HAS entered in; and no morbid confessional re-hashing of the shameful "disillusioning" experience, for your husband's information, can alter the fact that you did deal him the most heinous double-cross the mind of conventional man can conceive. The way to clean up this situation is to stop mucking about in it, imaginatively. Stop thinking of your immediate necessity to reorient yourself to righteous living as confronting you with somber "Greek tragedy" alternatives. It is safe to say that you have soiled your own record largely as a result of wrong thinking generally; and wrong thinking about sex specifically. Your "frustrated feelings," from the beginning of marriage, were obsessively gloomy,—stemming from a cramped and misleading estimate of the potentials and factors involved in a joyous and healthy comradeship. You "thought" yourself straight into trouble on the sex sector of experience;—and are now in a position where you must "think" yourself clear of the mess you are subjectively swamped in.

Husband Doesn't Figure In Spiritual Reckoning

If you love your husband with any sentiments worthy of the name, and in a manner that is even vestigially adult,—which is to say, in a stanchly protective, morale-supporting sense,—you will exercise the spiritual discipline to purge yourself (without bellowing to him) of your sordid sin of transient disloyalty. According to the best theological advices, one is purged of such primarily self-damning lapses as yours when one has wholly repented them, in a private and voiceless prayer of contrition, and simultaneously re-dedicated one's self, whole heartedly, to an inexorably righteous course thereafter,—a course to be chastenedly kept with the help of a Higher Power, consciously besought, silently and trustfully and continuously.

It is my opinion that your husband doesn't enter into the spiritual reckoning which your transgression presents to you. To try to drag him in, by burdening his mind and spirit with a co-consciousness of your present sense of infamy,—as a supposed means of sharing and lightening your load of remorse,—would be to doubly intensify your senseless offense against him. The only honorable and rational method of making amends to him for your foolish, half-wilful misconduct is to become, to the best of your ability, the perfect wife.—who learned, in secret deep humiliation, a true and lasting appreciation of his most deserving worth.

Restore Moral Order By Purifying Viewpoint

As for your theory that you shall never forgive yourself; and that this seems "just penalty" to you,—that is a morbidly flagellating viewpoint that directly contradicts and injuriously violates the operation of spiritual law. Relentless remorse of the brand you assign yourself, tantamount to a conviction of "eternal damnation," has done more to cripple the spirit of frail, though indestructibly aspiring, human beings than perhaps any other universal emotion. Since forgiveness of sins is a cardinal principle of Christian doctrine, and since remorse is refusal to forgive one's self, and since we are judged in accordance as we judge,—you should, in the interest of spiritual health, and in obedience to spiritual law, forgive yourself and forget this instance of moral failure, as your first step up toward "rational living." And, by the way, for further instruction along lines of "right thinking," get a copy of Emmet Fox's fine little book, "The Sermon On the Mount;"—or some of his various pocket-size pamphlets. They may be found at bookstores, or at the local headquarters of International New Thought, at 1317 F Street Northwest, Room 306. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Save Shortening

Shortening in many cakes may be reduced by one-fourth cup. Reducing the shortening makes cakes which do not keep so well as richer cakes, but they are still good cakes. Serve them fresh. Results are better if cake flour is used instead of all-purpose flour. Cake flour is not only cheaper than shortening. It is unrationed as well.

Quick Lunch Sandwich

Hot peanut butter and bacon sandwiches will hit the spot for school children or war workers home for a quick lunch. Toast slices of bread on one side only. Spread untoasted side with peanut butter. Top each with a slice of bacon and broil slowly until bacon is browned and crisp. Serve hot.

Martha Ellyn's Platter Chatter

Here's a square of melting superbness. A great deal can be said for this Caramel Square, it is easily made, remains moist, and doesn't require a great amount of sugar and eggs. The ones who are fortunate enough to eat this dessert will run out of adjectives when trying to describe it

Chocolate cake undoubtedly has "it." It is the cake that men like. Set a freshly baked, thickly iced cake before two or three men and all you will have left of it are the crumbs on the carpet.

Martha Ellyn

If you haven't been making cakes because your sugar supply is limited, then you will be glad to know you can make a Caramel Square, complete with Quick Fudge Icing, using only 2 cups of sugar.

Birthdays, anniversaries and homecomings all call for some special bit of food. When your boys or girls in the services come home on a furlough, treat them to this delicious cake which gives a generous return for the little it calls for.

Meat being the scarce food it is, perhaps you will have to use another food for the pivotal dish of the meal. Scalloped crab meat, a noble dish, is included in the following menu:

Dinner Menu

Scalloped Crab Meat
Minted Green Peas
Delmonico Potatoes
Perfection Salad Rolls
Caramel Square
Raspberry Sherbet
Iced Coffee

The recipes for the Scalloped Crab Meat, Minted Peas and Caramel Squares follow:

CARAMEL SQUARE

Cream ½ cup shortening and ¼ cup brown sugar together until light and fluffy. Add ¼ cup caramel sirup and mix thoroughly. Add 2 beaten eggs to the creamed mixture. Add 1 teaspoon vanilla extract and blend well. Sift 2 cups sifted flour with 3 teaspoons baking powder and ½ teaspoon salt and add to creamed mixture alternately with ¾ cup milk. Mix to smooth batter. Pour into an 8 x 8 x 2-inch lined pan. Bake in moderate oven, 350 degrees, for 45 to 50 minutes. Remove from pan and spread with Quick Fudge Frosting.

The following are the recipes for making the Caramel Sirup and the Quick Fudge Frosting:

CARAMEL SIRUP

Caramelize ¼ cup granulated sugar in a saucepan over low heat. When sugar has become light brown liquid, add gradually ½ cup boiling water. Boil to a sirup.

Quick Fudge Frosting—Melt 2 squares chocolate and 1 tablespoon butter or margarine in top of double boiler. Add 1 cup granulated sugar, 2 beaten eggs and ½ cup milk. Cook until thick, stirring constantly. Cool. Add 2 cups confectioner's sugar, ½ teaspoon vanilla and beat thoroughly until smooth. Spread on cake. Yield: 2 cups frosting.

SCALLOPED CRAB MEAT

Pick over 1½ cups crab meat and remove pieces of shell or fiber. Add 1 tablespoon lemon juice, a dash of Worcestershire sauce and 2 tablespoons sherry if desired. Fold into 1 cup white sauce. Turn into buttered individual baking dishes. Sprinkle with crumbs. Bake it hot oven (450 degrees) 10 to 15 minutes, or until crumbs are browned. Serves four.

MINTED GREEN PEAS

Shell the peas, inspect, and wash. Mix with fresh mint leaves. Cook, uncovered, in small amount of boiling salted water 15-20 minutes, or until tender Drain, if necessary. Add salt, pepper, butter and a dash of sugar.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Don't fly off the handle in hot weather, or get into any heated arguments, or even bring up the subject of politics! If you want to keep cool cool, keep your temper. Getting mad raises your metabolism and makes you just that much more uncomfortable.

Another factor is food. It's fuel, so don't over-stoke. A heavy, four-course dinner preceded by cocktail furnishes too many calories (heat units) for a sweltering day. Besides, your system adjusts to the weather and your muscles relax somewhat. You don't use as many calories and can't take care of as many. That makes two good reasons for cutting down on the right foods high in fat and sugar. And, by the way, you won't mind the meat rationing so much in the hot weather because protein is "heating." Keep your summer menus light and include plenty of fresh fruits, vegetables and salads.

If you perspire freely, you need more water and more salt. Don't drink the water too cold or too fast. Salt tablets are usually provided in plants and shops where hard physical work is required. You can get the same result by sprinkling more salt on melons, vegetables and salads.

You generate the same amount of heat regardless of the season and the problem in summer is to get rid of it. A hot or cold drink, alcohol bath, an electric fan, and porous (and preferably nonclinging' clothes all help you to stand the heat.

It isn't the heat, it's the humidity that determines whether a hot or cold beverage is more cooling. If the humidity is low, a hot drink makes you cooler because it induces perspiration. That doesn't work when the humidity is up. Then you should have a cold beverage which must be warmed in the stomach and carries away some of the heat in the process.

The trick of cooling off with a bath is to keep the bathroom from getting all steamed up. You can prevent that by letting the cold water run first almost to the level you want your tub. Then, turn off the cold tap and let the hot water run until your bath is the right temperature. It doesn't take much hot water. Mix the two by splashing with your hand. Before stepping out of the tub let the cold water run again to cool off some more and finally, dash a little cold water on the back of your neck.

When you exercise, wear the proper clothes for it. Shorts, a loose jumper and bare feet—the costume of Leslie Brooks, movie starlet, above, is a sensible choice

Market Report On Fruits, Vegetables

As the season advances, and the "Irish spud" comes to market in larger quantities, its quality gets better and better. This week begins, according to market reporters of the Food Distribution Administration, with an increased supply of Cobbler potatoes on the Washington wholesale market. These potatoes are from later diggings in North Carolina, Maryland and Virginia. Early in the week shoppers will find their quality to be very good, and their price about the same as a week earlier.

In addition to potatoes, seven other vegetables may head shopping lists this week, as being plentiful in supply. Briefly they are: Cabbage, tomatoes, corn, snap beans, lettuce, carrots and cucumbers. The cabbage is the round, green variety, with heads that are well-rounded with vitamins. Noted as a vitamin C rich vegetable, the green leaves of this summer cabbage likewise advertises it's wealth of vitamin A. It is reasonably priced and of good quality.

The tomato season is getting under way, and the local supplies are increasing. They are reasonably priced and of good quality. Snap beans from nearby Maryland and Virginia are plentiful. They are of good quality and moderately priced. Corn, both the white and yellow varieties, is now coming from North Carolina. It has been picked at the right stage and is young and tender; however, the ears vary in size and in being well-filled. The price shows no change. Iceberg lettuce is more plentiful and lower in price than a week ago. Carrots continue to be of excellent quality and priced at a reasonable figure. Shipments of cucumbers from Delaware and the Eastern Shore are increasing. The quality of these cucumbers is generally good, and they are wearing lower price tags. Green peppers and beets are in moderate supply. The peppers are small to medium in size and are somewhat pale in color.

In the fruit line, salmon moat cantaloupes are increasing in supply. They are of good quality and are lower priced than earlier in the season. Although increasing, the supply of new apples and watermelons is still limited. Both fruits are of good quality, and they are selling at luxury levels. Peaches from Georgia continue in light supply, and remain in the high priced bracket.

Glorify Liver Sausage

Liver sausage or braunschweiger has the same high food values that other livers possess, so plan to serve it more often. Try it in this hot sandwich suggestion. Toast bread on one side. Spread untoasted side with mashed liver sausage. Sprinkle with grated onion or grated cheese and place under broiler until lightly browned. Serve hot with a fresh green salad.

Guard Tools From Rust

Latest Data on British Women At War Found in New Booklet

Gives Further Proof That Distaff Side in England Is Giving Its All to Emergency Effort

American women: Attention.

Do you want a glimpse into your own future? Then get a copy of a little booklet, recently issued by the British Information Service, entitled "Fifty Facts About British Women at War." It may give you some ideas about the kind of life you're going to be leading if this war lasts much longer.

"Our women tipped the scales of war," accolades Ernest Bevin, Minister of Labor and National Service, on the opening page. And the 50 facts that follow point up Mr. Bevin's statement.

Here are a few items to think about: All women in Britain between the ages of 18 and 45 are registered for some form of national service. Those who do not choose to enter the auxiliary forces, the land army, nursing, civil defense or certain wartime industries may be ordered into work according to the national need at the time. Single women, or those wtihout domestic ties, are considered as "mobile" workers who may be ordered to leave their homes and go where labor is needed.

Nine out of ten unmarried British women between the ages of 19 and 45 are in the uniformed forces, munitions factories or essential war work. One in four of the married women of Britain is employed in wartime industry. In the Royal Ordnance Factories, where guns, shells and explosives are made, 60 per cent of the workers are women. In the British aircraft industry, 40 per cent of the employes are women. One firm replaced 500 men by 500 women in three months without any loss of output.

England Is Now A Woman's World

The greatest industrial reserve in Britain is among "immobile" women and those who can undertake only part-time work. Over 500,000 women have rearranged their household responsibilities to become part-time workers. Two part-time workers have been found to produce more than one full-time worker—often as much as 50 per cent more.

Women students in Britain are admitted to the universities only if they intend to take up work of national importance upon receiving a degree. Care of children of women warworkers is looked upon as the government's responsibility. By October of last year 250,000 children were regularly looked after while their mothers were at work.

In Britain, the milkman, the postman, the man who reads the gas meter, the truck driver and the porter—tens of thousands of them have been replaced by women. Over half the employes of the postoffice are women. On antiaircraft gun sites in Britain mixed batteries of men and women fight off the attacks of the Luftwaffe. To the women goes the responsibility of working out by the aid of scientific instruments where the gun is to be aimed: to the men the job of firing the shell.

Although members of the British women's services do not undertake combatant duties, they have frequently been under enemy fire. Many have been decorated. Fire-watching duty for women between the ages of 20 and 45 is compulsory for those working less than 55 hours a week.

Any Work Can Be Theirs In Wartime

The WRENS are every day taking over more of the jobs formerly carried out by men ratings. Members of the ATS work at 63 trades, such as switchboard and teleprinter operators, kine-theodolite operators, dispatch riders, cooks, draughtsmen, orderlies; they work on experimental ranges, in gunnery research, on antiaircraft duties, on radio location duties and with searchlight batteries. The strength of the WAAF is now greater than that of the RAF in September, 1938. Its members are taking an ever increasingly important part in the ground work involved in bomber raids and fighter sweeps, in which commissioned officers of the WAAF work as photographic officers, metreorological officers, code and cypher officers, intelligence officers and in many other skilled occupations.

And that is only the beginning of what the women of Britain are doing in their embattled country. Just to give you a hint of what's ahead for America.

Want a Worth-While Job? Then How About Helping the Blind?

Braille Transcribers Needed; Correspondence Course Offered by Library of Congress

By Martha Rhyne

War on any front can rightly be called a conflict of emotions. There is the bestial, astrocious side. There is the calm, humanitarian side, the urge to do something for somebody less fortunate than you.

You have said so many times, "If there were just something that I could do to help my country." Maybe you have a living to make, a homemaking job to do, children to rear, or any number of other duties which keep you from serving in canteens or rolling bandages or driving an ambulance.

But there is one service you can render to citizens of our country who need help, either in war or peace. Through the Library of Congress, you can take, by correspondence, a course in Braille—the reading and writing system used by blind persons to find light in a world darkened by sightlessness.

In a quiet office on the third floor of the Library of Congress is Miss Alice Rohrbach, herself blind, who, as one of four staff members of the "Books for the Adult Blind" and "Braille Transcription" division of the Library of Congress, is engaged in training workers who are genuinely interested in helping blind persons.

Takes Time and Plenty of Patience

Learning Braille and transcribing books for the blind is a job requiring time and patience. It is not a job that you can do in your spare time or at will to alleviate time's hanging heavy on on your hands. It is a service job which you must have your heart in.

The staff of this organization, now under the Library of Congress but formerly under the joint effort of the Red Cross and the Library of Congress, is not interested in giving the course to persons who are simply "fascinated" with the interesting Braille system and want to do something different. They want people who are willing to stick it out and do a thorough job.

The correspondence course can be secured through the mail free of charge. One has to buy his own slate, stylus, eraser and Braille paper. After the course of lessons is given, he has to submit a trial transcription to the authorities for approval. Two chances are given—if you fail the first examination, you have one more opportunity to show your mettle.

Some Cost Is Also Involved

Then, as you set about transcribing textbooks and other reading materials for the blind, you buy the paper, pay for the proofreading, which is done by especially trained blind persons all over the nation, and pay the small cost of binding the book which is to be distributed in centers where they can be used by the sightless.

Books in Braille are a shaft of light to the blind. If you who have wanted to do something for the less fortunate, here is a real opportunity to serve if you have the time and stickability which it requires.

Defense Board Is Honored At Gala Fete

Every member of the Inter-American Defense Board, who happened to be in Washington—and in good health—yesterday turned out for the gala "after 5:30" get-together at which two popular Costa Ricans, Col. Fernando de la Guardia Tinoco and Lieut. Col. Bernardo de la Guardia Tinoco, were hosts.

The party took place at 2621 Foxhall Road, the home of J. M. Elizalde, who is an old friend of the de la Guardias, and is also quite a popular person in his own right. Truth of the matter is, that nobody in his right mind—nobody, that is, who happens to be invited—would miss any social event at "Mike" Elizalde's home; and yesterday, with the additional enticement of having two Inter-American Defense Board delegates as cohosts, the event was one of the outstanding parties of the midsummer season.

Also Celebrates Two Promotions

Gold braid was all over the place—for a very good reason. Even on the shoulders of the hosts were additional measures of that coveted quantity of material which designates that an officer has won a promotion; for both the La Guardias were celebrating their own official promotions, while feting fellow members of the Defense Board.

Among those invited were the following delegates, and their wives: Capt. Alberto D. Brunet, and Senora de Brunet, and Military Attache Col. Antonio Parodi, of the Argentine Embassy; Col. Oscar Moscoso, who is both Bolivian Attache and delegate, and Senora de Moscoso; Brazilian Air Attache, Col. Armando de Souza e Mello Araripoia, also delegate and Senhora Araripoia; Brazilian Military attache, Col. Stenio de Albuquerque Lima and Senhora Lima; Brazilian Naval Attache and Senhora do Valle; Chilean Chief of Military Mission, Maj. Gen. Arturo Espinosa Mujica and Senora de Espinosa Mujica; Chilean Naval Attache and Senora de Holger; Chilean Air Attache, Wing Comdr. Teodoro Ruiz-Diez; and Chilean Military Attache, Lieut. Col. Lopez-Larrain and Senora de Lopez-Larrain; Colombian Military and Air Attache, Lieut. Col. Ernesto Buenaventura; Cuban Military and Air Attache, Col. Felipe Munilla; and Cuban Naval Attache, Lieut. Comdr. Felipe Cadenas; Dominican Military Attache, Maj. Salvador Cobian and Senora de Cobian; Ecuadorian Military Attache, Col. Augustin Alban Borja and Senora de Alban Borja, and Assistant Military Attache, Capt. Luis Pineiros and Senora de Pineiros.

Many Notables Among Those Present

Still others invited were the Military Attache of El Salvador and Senora de Baron, the Guatamalan Military Attache, Col. Felix Castellanos; the Military Attache of Haiti, Col. Roche B. Laroch; the Mexican Military Attache, Brig. Gen. Luis Alamillo Flores; the Mexican Assistant Military Attache and Senora de Perez Allende, and the Mexican Assistant Naval Attache and Senora de Hernandez Sagarra.

Capt. Antonio Zavala Hernandez, Assistant Military Attache of Mexico, was also on the list of guests; as were Maj. Carlos A. Telleria of Nicaragua, Col. Luis Santiviago, Paraguayan Military Attache, Peruvian Naval Attache Rear Admiral Labarthe and Senora de Labarthe, Col. Armando Revoredo and Senora de Revoredo, and Lieut. Col. Jorge Sarmiento and Senora de Sarmiento.

Lieut. Gen. S. D. Embick, headed the list of United States delegates present, and still others invited included Maj. Gen. and Mrs. J. G. Ord, Col. and Mrs. Earle W. Hockenberry. From Uruguay came Col. and Senora de Farias, and from Venezuela were Col. and Senora de Jones-Parra.

In this country for the first time, Senor Bagu will visit Washington and New York, besides doing special research work at the Universities of Virginia, Chicago and Michigan. 'Coney Island' Vindicates Its Star's Early Judgment

WELL, SIR, just wait 'til you see it. Just wait. And it won't be long, since it opens tomorrow on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater.

There is no intention of reviewing the opulent business at this moment, but yesterday's preview of the Twentieth Century-Fox Technicolor production of "Coney Island" struck at least one of the audience of cricks as being about the most luscious, musical fol-de-rol that has come along since Hector was a pup, and Hector is practically full-grown now. Less than an hour after the screening, we are still in a sort of nostalgic daze.

SYLVIA SIDNEY

But over and above all that—see tomorrow's paper (Adv.)—the thing that impressed us most is Betty Grable's development into one of the smoothest and most alluring of the song-and-dance girls. Twentieth Century must be of the same impression, because in "Coney Island" they have worked their blonde minx almost to the point of dropping in her tracks. She is all over the place virtually all of the time, singing songs in such rapid succession that it would be difficult to keep up with them, unless, as was true of that one of us, you already knew them all by heart from those distant salad days, if that is what they were.

However, that is not so much the point as that when we first met Betty her future was as hazy as an early morning mist, even to her. In Hollywood, like so many promising youngsters, she was prematurely "typed" and was being pushed around from one chorus girl or coed role to another. She was a shade fed up with it all and so was making a stage tour with then-husband Jackie Coogan, just to see what she could do. She could do so much more than he could that it was no race.

The next time she came through, it was to play a week of stage appearances at the Earle on the same bill with Eddie "Rochester" Anderson. That was one bill Eddie didn't "steal." Master Coogan on his way to being a thing of the past, Betty told me then that she was through with Hollywood, at least for the time being. She was touring her way to New York by easy stages and a handsome stipend and hoped to get into a Broadway musical to prove to her own satisfaction whether she "had anything" or not. When Buddy de Sylva put her in the original stage production of "DuBarry Was a Lady," Betty had and was on her way. After that engagement, she went back to Hollywood, at Hollywood's behest, and has been more or less writing her own tickets ever since. She has never been so good as she is in "Coney Island" and never lovelier to look at. That Henry James fellow must have a brain in his head, too!

Just as the above paragraph came to a stop, the postman rang three of four times and left the Army Motion Picture Service's report of the "June Champions," as determined by the box-offices of the War Department theaters. They run in this order, "Stage Door Canteen," "Coney Island," "Bataan," "Aerial Gunner" and "Action in the North Atlantic. Three to two in favor of "war pictures," but you'll note where "Coney Island" stands. And what have I, just been telling you?

Nice Fare for the Summertime

Those who can do with a serious note in their hot-weather playgoing, will find the Sylvia Sidney-Luther Adler production of Helen Jerome's dramatization of Charlotte Bronte's "Jane Eyre," at the National this week, as worthy of their attention as last week's more antic "You Can't Take It With You," starring Fred Stone.

"You Can't Take It With You" played to capacity, except at the matinees, which for a considerable period now have been a little substandard, absenteeism and one thing and another being what they are in the Government.

If anything, "Jane Eyre" is a bit more conclusively "big time" than its immediate predecessor. It therefore deserves the same, or better, support by those who can go for a pulsing, melodramatic love story, not too enlivened with comedy for its own good.

Miss Sidney, incidentally, on Monday night was harassed by none of the boorish ebulliences of a "whistle stop" audience such as startled her almost out of her wits on the opening night of "Angel Street," a season or two back, and made this reporter the public's whipping boy for a month or so because he mentioned it.

Those who attend the benefit garden party to be given on the estate of Mrs. Anne Archbold, 3905 Reservoir Road, on Saturday, will be diverted by the "Gay Nineties" olio acts being presented by members of the cast of "Broken Hearts of Broadway," current melo on the Willard Roof. Mary Jane Kersey and Ted Tiller, heroine and hero, respectively, will duet in "Every Little Movement Has a Meaning All Its Own"—which dates back, I believe, to Lina Abarbanell in "Madame Sherry"—Natalie Core and Bibi Osterwald will abandon their "fallen woman" and "villainess" roles to tear off "Baby Sister Blues" and "Two Little Girls in Blue," and so on, and so on. All beginning promptly at 6 p. m. Phone WO. 2767 or ME. 7679 for your tickets.

HEDDA HOPPER

Emily Post Please Write!

Hollywood, Calif., July 13.—For sheer courtesy, I should have given Walter Winchell a farewell party the day he arrived in Hollywood. He did the same for me when I was all set to replace him on the air last December when he went to South America. In fact, he was so courteous I never even got on the air. . . . That columnist who insisted Janet Blair would marry Lieut. Lou Busch last Sunday at Frank Vincent's Arrowhead home has changed her tune and now insists they have set this Sunday for the ceremony. I talked with Janet and she said: "We will not be married this Sunday. In the first place, Lou can't get off. They have a big air show to put on from Santa Ana. The Army decides upon an officer's leave. Neither Lou nor I know when that leave will be granted. When it is granted, we're going to be married."

FRANCES FARMER

Give Her a Chance

Hasn't Frances Farmer suffered enough without unthinking people saying she and Clifford Odets will pick up that romance where it left off? Clifford Odets was married six weeks ago to Betty Grayson. . . . James Craig thinks black market horse meat boys tried to steal his two ponies from his alley ranch. He found them far from home, one of them crippled from having been caught in a gopher hole. . . . If you like prunes, you're going to be full of Fred MacMurray's this coming year, 'cause his ranch is bursting with them. . . . Marjorie Cummings, Jack's wife, has got herself a job with Frank Vincent in the story department. Begins Monday, and has the blessing of Uncle Louis Mayer.

Turn About

For the first time in history, the motion picture producers were given a party by the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce. Sure, they paid for their food, but the party was given for them. And about time, too. They've been asked to give for practically everything in the world. They'll be called upon before the war's over to do it many times again. So this was in the nature of an epoch-making event, with Governor Warren present, and Charles Francis Coe doing the principal speech making. The whole thing kind of gave you a glow. . . . Lew Crosby, no relation to Bing, gets a chance to do a picture, he'll be in Casey Robinson's "Revenge." Lew's married to Linda Hayes, one of the unknowns found by Jesse Lasky some years back. She worked around RKO for a couple of years. They expect their first baby in October.

Frances Langford, entertaining overseas, deserves the title of "Sweetheart of the Fighting Fronts." All told, she's sung to more than five million members of the service. She's keeping a diary of her experiences, which she'll turn into a book.

learns to toss a mean lasso for her lariat-dance number in M.-G.-M.'s forthcoming production of "I Dood It," in which she costars with Red Skelton. Her instructor is Sam Garrett, champion roper, who was lucky enough to hold this agreeable job for about six weeks. Eleanor has spent approximately that many months perfecting this tricky dance

LEONARD LYONS

Loose-Leaf Notebook

New York, July 13.

General MacArthur sent word, via friends who returned to the States last week, that he does not want to be President, that any plan to enter his name in a State primary would be without his consent and against his wishes, that he is out of politics, and that the only thing he wants is "to beat the Jap" . . . The WAFS, the ladies of the Ferry Service, probably will become part of the WACS shortly. Nancy Love, head of the WAFS, will be commissioned a Major in the WACS . . . The head of a noted midtown entertainment enterprise is awaiting strong action by the Labor Board, for his failure to pay overdue salaries.

ORSON WELLES

ↀ

Sergt. Joe Louis, who went to Washington last week, will be commissioned by the Army soon. After he leaves Washington, the heavyweight will spend his leave in Detroit . . . Wendell Willkie and a group of theatrical stars will speak over C. B. S. at 8 o'clock, July 17, protesting against persecution of racial minorities, with special emphasis on the Detroit riots . . . The Wallace-Jones fight isn't over. The Vice President will strike again, with a story concerning ships and rubber supplies which had to be abandoned at Malaya . . . Edgar Luckenbach, the shipping magnate, had $300,000 in cash, in his bedroom, when he died a few days ago.

ↀ

Ambassador John Winant and Lieut. Comdr. Herb Agar may be called upon to help bring the Giraud-de Gaulle factions together . . . Tom Lamont, whose reply to William Rose Benet in the Saturday Revue of Literature was front-paged, received 200 phone calls after the story appeared. Three of the callers were Luce of Time, Beck of Collier's and Hibbs of the Saturday Evening Post, requesting articles.

ↀ

Harry Cohn, head of Columbia Pictures, has offered $500,000 for the movie rights to "Life With Father," as a guaranty against a percentage, plus stipulations that it would be filmed in Technicolor and that Coauthors Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse would be engaged to write the screenplay . . . John LaTouche, the writer, returned Friday after a year in the Belgian Congo. He enters the Army this week . . . An American Air Force group took over an RAF station in England, and over the door found an RAF slogan, "Per Ardua Ad Astra." The Americans removed the sign, and substituted their own: "Per Flak Ad Nauseum."

ↀ

Orson Welles and Norman Corwin are collaborating again, on radio shows . . . Celeste Holm, of "Oklahoma," who made her night club debut a few days ago at La Vie Parisienne, has lured so many customers there that her options have been renewed for the next four months . . . Morton Downey's success at the Starlight Roof resulted in an additional month's engagement there . . . The Revuers, of the Blue Angel, have been signed for the movie, "Duffy's Tavern" . . . Sherman Billingsley has canceled his contract to appear in a movie, and will remain in New York to handle the crowds jamming his Stork Club.

ↀ

Donald O'Connor, the young film star, has enrolled for preflight training. He'll be 18 in the fall . . . When Buddy de Sylva, the Paramount boss, heard that Fred Waring was asking $350,000 to appear with his band in a movie, Buddy made a counter-proposal: "After the picture is made, you give us $350,000, and we'll give you the picture" . . . Georgie Tapps, the dancer, will be in the new musical, "My Dear Public." A part has been written into the show, for him . . . John Bright, coauthor of "Brooklyn, U. S. A.," has a new play for production. It's called "Over Here" . . . More resignations are forthcoming, at the War Manpower Commission.

ↀ

Arthur Schnabel, the famed pianist, was asked the difference between the music of Brahms and that of Wawner. "There isn't very much difference," Schnabel explained. "It's just that Wagner embraced a military career, while Brahms preferred to remain a civilian" . . . Bohuslay Martinu, who composed the new concerto for Mischa Elman, was born in a belfry and remained there for the first three years of his life. "I wasn't allowed down," he says, "until I learned how to pronounce my name."

ↀ

Ben Hecht has written a delightful fiction piece, "The Pink Hussar," about Ferenc Molnar and the Hungarian colony now in New York. Last week Hecht gave a dinner party for the characters in this story, and read it to them . . . Gilbert Miller, the producer, was one of the guests. And during the reading, he closed his eyes and yawned. "That proves he's paying close attention," Molnar assured Hecht. "In the theater, there are two extremes of listeners. Max Reinhardt will listen wide-eyed, silently and in rapt attention—but he's really thinking of something else, and isn't hearing a word you're saying. He's a good listener, but a bad hearer. Gilbert Miller, on the other hand, will yawn, speak, shut his eyes, but hear every word. He's a bad listener, but a good hearer."

Two pages of Stage and Screen appear in Sunday's Post.

Viereck Denies He Willfully Hid Activities

By Adele Bernstein
Post Staff Writer

Again denying specific Government charges that his political activities in behalf of the German government were "wilfully" concealed from the State Department, George Sylvester Viereck yesterday took the witness stand for a second time to assert that his work "for the cause of isolationism" was done "purely on my own."

Under this heading, the defendant volubly described such matters as his relationship with Dr. Hans Borchers, German consul general in New York; Prescott Dennett, now awaiting trial under a Federal indictment for conspiracy to commit sedition among members of the armed forces, and to whose Make Europe Pay War Debts Committee he contributed "perhaps as much as $5000" of "my own money"; the late Senator Ernest Lundeen and Representative Hamilton Fish, and the publishing firm of Flanders Hall, which put out numerous books allegedly based on material sent from Berlin.

Admits Big Loss

Viereck admittedly sank $22,500 in this publishing venture, getting a return of about $4500 on his investment before closing shop shortly before Pearl Harbor. It was a business venture, he declared, from which he hoped to make money.

Considerably more at ease this time, Viereck seemed eager to elaborate on his congressional connections and their mutual concern with the problem of keeping America out of war. At the behest of Special Assistant to the Attorney General George A. McNulty, however, Defense Counsel Leo A. Rover urged him to brevity.

His friendship with Senator Lundeen dated back to the first World War, Viereck said, and they shared the view that this country should be "as strong as possible" but should "keep out of other countries' affairs." He admitted freely, however, that "everyone" knew of his own work for a Munich newspaper and the German Library of Information, an arm of the Propaganda Ministry in Berlin.

News Letters Read

Prosecution and defense alternated in reading aloud to the jury sections from Viereck's "news letters" to his Munich editor, many of which were addressed to German Ambassador Diekhoff for the purpose, the defense insists, of evading the British censors. The Government maintains that these reports on American public opinion prior to the war were actually meant for the German Foreign Office.

One report, dated April 10, 1940, complained of Dorothy Thompson's presence in Italy and the probability that she would write about the "weakness" of Italian economy. The activities of Clare Boothe Luce also would "bear watching" while she was in Europe, the report said. "She is the author of that poisonous play, 'Margin for Error,' which is still running on Broadway," Viereck wrote.

As examples of "the excellent material to be found in the Congressional Record," Viereck reported to his superior that he was sending speeches by Representatives Hamilton Fish and Jacob Thorkelsen. He also noted in a dispatch that the Munich newspaper for which he worked had reprinted a speech by Charles A. Lindbergh.

Viereck faces a return to the witness stand today, when he will be cross-examined by the prosecution. Barring "unforeseen delays," the case is expected to be in the hands of the jury by tomorrow morning.

D. C. Air Cadet Scores Highest Naval Grade

Add to the achievements of the American boy the record of Henry Strong, Navy air cadet.

Strong, 19-year-old son of Lieut. Col. L. Corrin Strong and Mrs. Strong of 2712 Twenty-third Street Northwest, scored 3.83 out of a possible high of 4 at the preflight school at Athens, Ga. His grade is the highest ever recorded by the Navy, it was learned yesterday.

STRONG

Young Strong, a graduate of St. Alban's School here, left Washington in February for the Navy's "superman" school at Athens, where he underwent the athletic and indoctrination program by which the Navy toughens-up their future fliers. Beforehand he attended Pomfret School in Connecticut and left Williams College in his sophomore year.

Parents of the boys have been residents of Washington for 16 years. Col. Strong, an officer of the Services of Supply, assigned to duty at the War Department, was formerly president of the Hattie Strong Foundation, founded by his mother for student loans.

Bishop Freeman Left His Entire Estate to Widow

The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, who died here on June 6 at the age of 76, bequeathed his entire estate to his widow, Mrs. Ella V. Freeman, according to the petition for probate on file yesterday at District Court.

The petition disclosed that Bishop Freeman, beside leaving substantial insurance policies and securities in a joint account with Mrs. Freeman, willed her $3900 in personal property. Bishop's Freeman's debts were listed at $3000.

Record Acreage for '44 Crops Asked of U. S. Farmers by WFA

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

The War Food Administration yesterday called on America's farmers to plant in 1944 the greatest number of acres ever put into crop production in this country.

A specific goal of 380 million cultivated areas was asked, or 3 million more than were tilled during the peak year of 1932 before the New Deal started its acreage reduction and soil conservation programs.

An increase of 26 per cent, or a planting of 68 million acres, was permitted wheat farmers. Other crop acreage aims will be announced when 1943 yields are more fully determined.

Conservation Payments

A Government loan rate of $1.23 per bushel at the farm was established for the 1943 wheat crop. This is the same rate applied on the 1942 crop and represents a disappointment to wheat State Senators who this week urged War Food Administrator Marvin Jones to raise the Government guarantee.

In announcing the wheat loan, the Administrator said the WFA would continue—within the limits of available funds—to make conservation payments for approved practices essential for sustained production of wheat and other crops, and to prevent the creation of future "dust bowl" conditions.

"Our planted acreage of food crops can be expanded without plowing up land which should be kept in grass if we use crop land that has been idle during recent years and if we speed up the cycle of crop rotation on some farms," Jones said.

He said 1944 acreage goals for production of dry edible beans and peas might run 30 to 40 per cent above the 1943 level, 20 to 25 per cent above for peanuts, and 15 to 20 per cent above for soybeans "used as beans."

In addition, he said, some of the feed crops—particularly corn and alfalfa hay—should be increased substantially, and there should be continued high acreage for flaxseed, Irish and sweet potatoes.

Meat, Dairy Products

He said the production of meat, dairy products, and eggs must be maintained at high levels—but warned adjustments must be made to align these crops with the feed supplies this country will be able to grow or import.

"Pork output for the next 12 months is likely to be 65 per cent above the 1938-40 levels, beef and veal may be about 38 per cent above and lamb and mutton slightly higher than in those year. The 1944 livestock program will have to be developed in line with the feed yields from 1943 crops," he declared.

The WFA emphasized, however, that livestock production in the range country is an "efficient source of supply for high protein food," and said it should be maintained at levels consistent with safe stocking of the range and in line with available supplies of winter forage.

New Wheat Goal

The new wheat goal calls for seeding as large an acreage as in the record year of 1937, except in the North Central and Eastern States, "where other crops will contribute more to maximum food output."

Farmers of the Great Plains States were broadly advised to plant as much wheat as can be grown after reserving sufficient land for expanding more urgently needed crops, and "without departing from sound farming practices."

In the Pacific Northwest, where somewhat smaller increases were permitted, dry peas, dry beans, canning crops and potatoes should have priority over wheat, it was declared. In the Corn Belt and Lake States first call should be given to soybeans, corn, dry beans, potatoes, flax, and canning crops, the WFA said.

Farmers in the Southern and Eastern States were asked to plant more wheat than last year so as to be able to supply some of their local food and feed needs.

No marketing quotas will be in effect for the 1944 cotton crop, Jones said, because approximately eight million acres less than permitted are under cultivation this year.

Appleby Acts for U. S. On Interim Food Body

The State Department announced yesterday Paul H. Appleby, Undersecretary of Agriculture, will represent the United States on the United Nations Interim Commission on Food and Agriculture meeting here tomorrow.

Appleby was a delegate to the Hot Springs Food Conference, at which the Interim Commission was proposed to take steps to carry out recommendations of the conference.

Skeptic Shown 3 Meals for $1 On Trip to Pentagon Cafeteria

By Anne Hagner
Post Staff Writer

"Three meals a day for $1 in the Pentagon? Impossible!" said a dozen civilian War Department workers scornfully of a Post story Friday declaring that such food was available at Fantasia-on-the-Potomac.

So a reporter shanghaied a friend into making the trip to Arlington and learned that breakfast, lunch and dinner may be purchased for 95 cents in the Pentagon cafeteria, simply by following carefully selected "specials" for the noon and evening meals.

Furthermore, it was found, Pentagon food tastes good. It should not compared to dinner at the Statler or Mayflower, for it is not highbrow fare. But, as tasted by a pair of critical visitors, it is superior to many run-of-the-mill Washington restaurants—and you pay less for it.

Breakfast—orange juice, 1 egg (choice of preparation), 2 pieces of toast, 1 slice of butter, coffee or one-half pint of milk. Total cost, 25 cents.

Lunch—choice of escalloped ham, noodles and cheese or baked fish; choice of 2 vegetables or luncheon salad and 1 vegetable; 2 slices of bread or 1 roll, with 1 slice of butter; any dessert except ice cream, and beverage. Total cost, 35 cents. Without butter, it's 34 cents, and iced coffee or a half-portion of soup are 5 cents each extra.

Dinner: Fried codfish with potato and one vegetable or luncheon salad and one vegetable, or stuffed green pepper with any two vegetables or salad and one vegetable. Two slices of bread or one roll and one pat of butter. Any dessert except ice cream, and beverage. Total cost, 35 cents.

The reporter's friend, hungrier and in a mood to test the food, picked up these items at random: Two frankfurters and mashed potatoes, peas, half-pint of milk, crackers, butter, egg salad, and cake. The tray was laden and looked pretty expensive—but the cost was only 45 cents. She was enthusiastic about everything except the egg salad which, she said, tasted pretty drab.

Hostess for the meal was a third girl, an Air Forces secretary, who had frankfurters and mashed potatoes, beets, cottage cheese salad, milk, and a dish of applesauce, guaranteed by War Department inmates as a chef's specialty. Cost: 43 cents.

All three agreed the lunches were excellent—but almost too filling for middle-of-the-day consumption.

Meat Packers Ask Injunction To Get Supply

A New Jersey meat marketing firm and its subsidiary packing house filed suit yesterday against OPA Administrator Prentiss Brown, Secretary of Agriculture Claude Wickard and Food Administrator Marvin Jones in the United States Emergency Court of Appeals, charging "abuse of discretion" in revoking a meat quota permit of the company.

The suit, brought by the Riverview Packing Co. and the K and J Co., seeks an injunction to prevent enforcement of the Government order which would take the meat supply away from them, and claims a loss of well over $60,000 if the court should not take favorable action.

According to the suit, the K and J Co., which marketed meat for more than 30 years in New York and New Jersey, was told by the Nation's principal meat packers in 1942 that no more meat would be furnished because packers found it unprofitable to do so, in face of the low ceiling price on meat itself and the growing price of livestock.

"Relying on OPA advice," the suit states, the company then bought the Riverview Packing Company, only to learn in June of this year that it would be allowed no more meat by OPA. It is alleged no specific reason for this action was given, but the suggestion is made OPA might have revoked the quota because the company slaughtered no beef itself in 1942.

Also filed yesterday was a fourth suit brought by Cudahy Bros., Inc., meat slaughterers and packers of Wisconsin, who allege that in selling under contract to the Army, they are losing between 2 and 4 cents a pound on beef.

Swim Pools To Be Open Longer Hours

Recreation department swimming and wading pools are being opened for additional hours on Sundays and in the mornings, it was announced yesterday at the recreation board meeting.

The department pools, Georgetown, Thirty-fourth Street and Volta Place Northwest, and Rosedale, Seventh and Gales Streets Northeast, will be open for additional hours between 6 and 9 a. m. each morning.

Seven wading pools will open Sunday afternoons from 2 to 4:30 p. m.: Georgetown, Park View, Palisades, New York Avenue, Rosedale, Howard and Lincoln. Other additional wading hours will be afforded Sunday morning from 10 to 12 at Garfield, Hoover and Park View, and Langdon Park will be open for use seven days from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m.

Group to Study Sites

At the same meeting it was decided that a recreation board committee be appointed to cooperate with a Board of Education committee in studying school playground sites and resurfacing.

This decision followed a Board of Education request made because of citizen requests for school playground improvements.

It was found following the Board of Education's citizen meeting this spring that most complaints from parents and interested civic organizations were about school play facilities.

Funds for improvement and maintenance of playground areas were transferred to National Capital Parks from the Recreation Department. Among areas to be affected will be Rose Park Playground, where $2500 will be spent for surfacing, fencing and reconditioning of sewer lines; Congress Heights Playground, which will receive $2000 for renovation and remodeling of a field house, and Edgewood, Turkey Thicket, Randall and Sherwood Playgrounds, each of which will receive $2500 for erection of a field house.

Budget Meeting July 20

Birney School Building and grounds will be available for play during construction of a temporary school building on Barry Farms Playground.

Harry Wender, chairman; James Schwab, vice chairman, and Mrs. Alice Hunter, secretary, were reelected board officers for another year. A special meeting of the board to discuss 1945 budget estimates will be held Tuesday, July 20, at 3 p. m., in the Recreation Department Building, 3149 Sixteenth Street Northwest.

The classification committee of the board announced determination to appeal civil service classifications of certain Recreation Department employes, but it was announced that this cannot be done until after the classifications approved already are established and the positions filled.

Victory Sidelights

Vigilance Plea Made by Raid Warden

Victories overseas should not promote smugness at home, Chief Air Raid Warden William J. Mileham told 1500 assembled at a mass meeting last night sponsored by Southeast Civilian Defense Warden Service at Hine Junior High School.

The more desperate the enemy becomes, the more likely it is they will attempt to create a diversion by an attack on this country, he said.

Nonetheless, he acknowledged, the average person is likely to become careless in home defense after reading of our gains on the battlefields, making the warden's job harder. Furthermore, he said, the warden service is suffering from drafting of its manpower and needs its personnel increased by more women and by older men.

Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of District Civilian Defense, also spoke, and Mrs. Gifford Pinchot, head of feeding and housing, was introduced. An ambulance squad exhibited a completely equipped Red Cross ambulance.

Red Cross Invites 2000

Two thousand invitations to the dedication July 31 of the new Red Cross Blood Donor Center at the Acacia Life Insurance Building, 51 Louisiana Avenue Northwest, have been mailed by the District Chapter, it was announced yesterday.

Officers and members of civic, fraternal and patriotic organizations and the chiefs of various Government bureaus and divisions have been asked to attend, the Red Cross said.

WLB Work Discussion

Jesse Freidin of the War Labor Board will discuss his agency's work tonight at 6:30 p. m. in the National University, 818 Thirteenth Street Northwest. A discussion of war manpower problems by Bernice Lotwin, acting general counsel of the War Manpower Commission, will follow Freidin's talk.

President Denies Seizure of Packers

The Government has no plans to take over the packing industry in connection with its food stabilization program, President Roosevelt said yesterday. At his press conference he expressed wonder where the query originated and said emphatically he hoped no such thing would occur.

Canning Center Regulations Adopted in D.C.

Regulations for the operation of the Community Canning Center at 1640 Wisconsin Avenue Northwest, as provided for by the 1944 District budget, were released yesterday by the District Commissioners.

Under the appropriation bill $75,000 was allocated for use of the canning center, the penny milk program in schools and for Victory Garden supervisors. The canning program will take over the old Central Kitchens formerly used by the WPA school lunch project.

Harry M. Gardner, supervisor of the penny milk program, will also supervise the canning center. He said yesterday the project will get under way within the next 10 days. At the present time, he said, the project was waiting for pressure cookers to be sent from Baltimore.

The regulations as adopted by the Commissioners will be as follows:

1. Patrons will furnish all food products and containers.

2. The canning center shall assist in the preparation of food, provide all necessary space, equipment, heat, water and steam.

3. The canning center shall retain 10 per cent of all of the finished product in payment for its services and may accept raw food. All retained food will be distributed to institutions.

4. The center will not be responsible for any liabilities incurred by any of the patrons.

5. Sale of food processed at the center will be strictly prohibited as being in violation of the OPA regulations. Commercial canning is prohibited.

6. Preference in the use of the center's facilities will be given to produce of Victory Gardens.

7. Application for use of the facilities must be made at least 24 hours in advance. Telephone National 6000, Branch 2523.

The center will have a staff of 20 persons according to Gardner. Starting this week eight schools will give instruction in canning: Anacostia, Central, Deal, MacFarland, Paul, Powell, Taft and Taylor. The schools will be open one day each week.

Sailor Seized In Slaying Of 2 Policemen

By the Associated Press

Norfolk, Va., July 13.—Paul N. Deadwiley, 20, aviation radioman second class, U. S. N., who had been sought by police on warrants charging him with the slaying of two Norfolk policemen early today in a gun battle, was arrested shortly before 5 p. m. in a downtown drug store.

Detective Lieut. H. L. Dickens said the sailor was apprehended by Navy Shore Patrolmen Raymond F. Hall and Malvin G. Harris and Norfolk Patrolman H. M. Scheepers, a moment after he entered the store.

Deadwiley had a bullet wound in the arm, Dickens said, and was taken to a hospital to have the bullet extracted. The sailor offered no resistance.

Dickens reported that the sailor's wife, Mrs. Sue Deadwiley, was with her husband when he was apprehended, and that she was being detained for questioning. No charges had been placed against her, Dickens said. Deadwiley's home town was listed as Duncan, Okla.

Detective Leon Nowitzky said he obtained the warrants for the arrest of Deadwiley after learning that a .38-caliber Government issue revolver found at the scene of the shooting had been issued to Deadwiley under the name R. B. Nelson at the Norfolk Naval Air Station. The sailor had been absent without leave from the air station, the detective reported.

Officers Frank A. Davis, 49, and Robert F Dunn, 38, were killed in a battle with gunmen who had broken into West's Pharmacy at 7501 Granby Street.

Answered Robbery Call

Davis, who was shot through the temple, died at the scene. Dunn died at 8:05 a. m. approximately three hours after the shooting, at a local hospital. He had been shot in the mouth.

The two officers, who worked together in a police radio car, were dispatched to the drug store in response to a telephone call to police headquarters from an unidentified citizen shortly before 5 a. m. that the place was being robbed. Investigating officers later found the store had been entered through a side window. Another business establishment across the street also had been entered and robbed.

Chief of Police John F. Woods and a large force of detectives and other officers went to work on the case as soon as the shooting was reported.

Clews, the nature of which were not revealed, were being investigated. Police said neither of the two officers was able to make a statement before dying.

Police Guns Emptied

There were indications that at least one of the thieves was hit by the policeman's shots. One man, whose name was not immediately learned, told police he saw a man limping across a field near the store after the shooting. Officer Dunn's wallet was found some distance from where he was found, indicating that he had chased a man, who obviously escaped across a vacant lot.

One of the store windows was riddled with bullets, and since there were no witnesses to the actual shooting, it was believed that the thieves opened fire on the officers as soon as they stepped from their automobile.

3 Capital Area Men Reported Missing in Navy Casualty List

They are Robert Earl Carpenter, 23, son of Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Carpenter, 6621 Eastern Avenue, Takoma Park, Md., an oiler, who was reported missing from his first trip taken since re-enlistment in April. He had been ashore two months after release in January, and visited his parents.

Mrs. Carpenter said: "We are proud of him and still feel we will have some news of him. One boy I heard of was missing 14 months and walked in on his parents the other day, so we are still hoping."

John McCormick Carter, 22, engine cadet, son of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Lee Carter, Rockville, Md., was reported missing from his first trip on an oil tanker after 12 days at sea. A telegram to his parents on June 6th said that he would be home soon.

Carter was graduated from Richard Montgomery High School, Rockville, in 1939. His father, employed by the Government as special reviewer in the General Accounting Office, reports that he has checked with survivors of the ship and is assured that his son is lost at sea.

William M. Engebretson, son of William E. Engebretson, 3524 A Street Southeast, was reported missing from a trip across the North Atlantic. He joined the Merchant Marine as wiper in 1942 after employment with the Universal Credit Co. Previous to that he had spent two years with the National Capital Park Service, where he was a foreman.
